Nine-Hour Raid Wrecks Great London Buildings; R. A. F. Bombs Berlin, Hamburg; Dover Shelled; 60-Day Draft Delay Is Turned Down by Senate

Amendment Held 'Good as Dead' After 48-19 Vote; Changes Refused

The Senate sent the conscription bill to a conference with the House members yesterday, under circumstances virtually assuring defeat of the Fish amendment withholding the authority to draft men pending a 60-day trial of voluntary recruiting.

Leaders hope to take final action on the bill before the end of the week and send it to the President in substantial accord with Administration wishes. Their hope was strengthened by a show of sentiment among the Senators on two controversial phases of the measure yesterday.

The bill was submitted to a joint conference committee, after an attempt to have the Senate accept the House changes, including the Fish proviso, in toto, failed. Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, an opponent of the bill, moved to accept the House version of the bill, but it was rejected on a voice vote.

Clark Offers Motion

Then another opponent, Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, moved to instruct the conferees to accept the 60-day delay. This was beaten by the substantial vote of 19 to 48. The latter motion, if it had been successful, would have assured the Senate another chance to pass on the Fish amendment, rejected earlier by a two-vote margin.

Later, six Senators who are opposed to the Fish amendment were named to represent the upper house in the conference. Four of the five House members on the conference committee are against it, and if the group drops the proviso, as is expected, approval of their report is likely.

Under Congressional rules, the representatives of the two houses can come back and ask for a vote up or down on a blanket ratification of their action. They can ask for a separate vote on the Fish amendment, but in view of the strong Administration opposition to it, the prediction was freely heard last night that they would not do so and that the section was as good as dead. For backers of the amendment could not produce the votes against ratification of the conference report and final passage of the bill that they did on the delay. It was approved Saturday, 207 to 200.

The Senate also rejected, 23 to 44, a motion to instruct the conferees not to accept the House age limits for the draft. The Senate bill would draft men from 21 to 30, inclusive, only, while the House version covers those 21 to 44, inclusive.

Named to represent the Senate in the negotiations with the House were Chairman Sheppard of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, and Senators Reynolds, of North Carolina; Thomas, of Utah, and Minton, of Indiana, Democrats, and Austin, of Vermont, and Bridges, of New Hampshire, Republicans. All six voted for the bill.

Barkley Attacks Proposal

Majority Leader Barkley attacked the Fish proposal during yesterday's debate. He declared it well named, because its purpose is to "fish" for votes in November. He said it would call for a "ballyhoo campaign" in which public opinion would bring a "vicious coercion" to bear on the unem-

House Votes Reorganization For District

Passage Unanimous; King Is Skeptical Of Senate Chances

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

The Kennedy bill proposing to reorganize the District government was passed by the House yesterday without a dissenting vote after less than an hour's debate. Five minor amendments were adopted and a sixth was rejected.

The measure, which has lain dormant on the House calendar for five months, was sent to the Senate, where it faces an uncertain fate due to the proximity of adjournment and the pressure of national legislation.

Chairman King of the Senate District Committee was skeptical of the prospects for getting the bill through the Senate before adjournment. He said, however, that he will confer with the commissioners at once and follow their advice.

A meeting of the "kitchen cabinet" was called by the commissioners for this morning after being informed of the House action. The purpose of the conference, it was said, is to consider the five amendments.

District officials expressed surprise at the unanimous House approval of the Kennedy bill in view of its previous labeling of the measure as "controversial" by House leaders and by Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee.

$3,861,053,312 In Ship Orders Placed by U. S. For 2-Ocean Navy

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy yesterday placed orders for seven "super-battleships" and 194 other warships costing $3,861,053,312, designed to give the Nation a "two-ocean Navy" superior to the present combined fleets of the totalitarian powers.

Acting swiftly only two hours after President Roosevelt signed the $5,251,000,000 appropriation bill carrying funds for starting work on the ships, Acting Secretary Forrestal signed the contracts for the vessels. Naval officials estimated that the keels of the first of the ships would be laid within six months and that most of them would be completed by 1945.

1,200,000-Man Army

Approval of the big defense bill by the President sent the defense commitments of the past session beyond $15,000,000,000, and released funds to:

Provide the Army with additional arms and other supplies to equip completely a 1,200,000-man force.

Procure reserve stocks of guns, tanks, ammunition and other items which take a long time to manufacture for an additional 800,000 men.

Purchase 14,394 Army and 4,028 Navy planes, which with those now on hand or previously appropriated for would give the Nation a total air force of about 35,000 planes.

"Into Full Swing"

Stephen Early, in announcing the signing of the bill at Hyde Park, and the Navy's plans for speedily placing warship orders, added:

"And so the Government goes into full swing at 10 o'clock this morning."

No announcement was made as to the size of the battleships, but on Capitol Hill, members of the naval committees said they would be 45,000 tons or larger. Four of the 45,000 tonners are now building, but none in the existing fleet is over 35,000 tons.

Antispy Agents Asked

In another defense move, the Navy asked Congress to authorize the appointment of a force of naval agents to combat espionage and sabotage directed against the naval service.

Assistant Secretary Lewis Compton, acting for the Navy Department, sent a draft of a bill to the House, setting forth the powers to be granted such agents and the terms under which they could make arrests.

"The authority provided in the proposed legislation is designed primarily for operatives of the Office of Naval Intelligence," Compton said in a letter to Speaker Bankhead. "There is at present no legal authority for representatives or agents of the Navy to make arrests in any place other than in the naval service, except, of course, under those exceptional conditions where any citizen is authorized to make an arrest."

Yesterday's warship orders exceed any previous program in American history. They will give the Nation a fleet of 688 war ves-

A Clean Sweep

G. O. P. Wins 5 Major Offices At Stake in Maine Election

Brewster Far Ahead In Race for Senate; Sewall Is Governor

By the Associated Press

Portland, Me. (Tuesday), Sept. 10.—Maine Republicans apparently scored a clean sweep of all five major offices at stake as final returns poured in early today from this State's first-in-the-Nation election.

As the unofficial tabulation climbed toward the two-thirds mark, the election of the Republican gubernatorial nominee, Sumner Sewall, already was conceded by his Democratic opponent, while Representative Ralp O. Brewster, the G. O. P. choice for the United States Senate, held an apparently insurmountable lead of 51,000 votes over former Louis J. Brann, the Democratic nominee.

In the three contests for seats in the U. S. House, the Republican aspirants ran far ahead.

Several heavily Democratic cities remained to be heard from, but their combined normal Democratic majorities were far less than the pluralities already rolled up by the Republicans.

In 1936, Republicans retained a U. S. Senate seat by only 4,600 votes, while piling up a 37,000 majority for their gubernatorial nominee. Two years ago the Republican gubernatorial victory margin was only 17,000.

With 533 of the State's 629 precincts counted, Brewster held a lead of 126,753 to 74,930 over Brahm for

Martin Hails Maine Triumph

Republican National Committee Chairman Joseph W. Martin, jr., last night hailed the Maine election results in a statement saying:

"Early returns from Maine tonight clearly indicate that the country is getting back to Republicanism. A Republican clean sweep in Maine by the wide margins recorded in the incomplete returns means without any doubt the election of Wendell Willkie, Senator McNary and a Republican majority in the House of Representatives in November.

"These results are concrete evidence of the truth of our contentions that the country has tired of waiting for recovery and preparedness and wants to place in office men who will achieve these goals instead of merely talking about them. The Maine election definitely heralds the end of the Roosevelt Administration, with all its inefficiency, bungling, extravagance and radicalism."

2,200 Planes, 500,000 Rifles Sold to Allies

Van Zandt Publishes Figures Purportedly In War Dept. Records

By International News Service

Representative Van Zandt (Republican), Pennsylvania, declared last night the United States Government has turned over to Great Britain and France, since beginning of the war, 2,200 military airplanes, 600 French "seventy-fives," 70,000 .30-caliber machine guns, 500,000 Lee-Enfield rifles and 150,000,000 rounds of rifle ammunition.

All of the equipment belonged to the Army or Navy, and was classed as surplus war material, said Van Zandt, a World War veteran and former commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

In all cases transfers were accomplished by the Army and Navy selling back the equipment to its manufacturers, for resale to the Allies, he said. Van Zandt added his information came from confidential records of the "highest official character" in the War Department.

Ford, Wearing Willkie Badge, Visits Nominee

First Speech to Cite Difference Between His Views, New Deal

By the Associated Press

Rushville, Ind., Sept. 9.—After a brief non-committal talk with Henry Ford, Wendell L. Willkie announced tonight that his first major campaign address next Monday at Coffeyville, Kans., would interpret "the difference between my philosophy of free enterprise and that of the New Deal."

The Republican Presidential nominee said that the speech would tie in domestic issues with international affairs. He also disclosed that one of the talks on his Western tour would take up the third term issue.

Willkie received Ford late in the morning at his 80-year-old rented home. Both men declined to comment afterward, except for a remark by Willkie that the auto manufacturer came to "pay his respects" and their visit was "very pleasant."

Asked whether Ford pledged sup-

A Matter of Circumstance

'France Free,' Says New Envoy; Nazis Demand Nation's Food

Raw Materials Also Included in Reported Order on Vichy

By Frank L. Kluckhohn
Copyright by New York Times

The German government has made a formal demand upon the French government in Vichy for a substantial part of the food and raw materials in unoccupied France and for any such products that France may be able to import in the future, it was revealed yesterday in reliable diplomatic reports reaching Washington.

In view of Nazi statements that one of the chief objectives of the new French Ambassador to this country, Gaston Henri-Haye, would be to obtain food from the United States for the relief of France, this information was expected to add a fresh obstacle to any such plans.

Another matter of embarrassment to Washington is the fact that the French in Martinique still maintain possession of the 80 army and 50 Navy bombers transferred before the fall of France for use against Hitler. The planes are still aboard a French aircraft carrier in Martinique.

Distressed by evidence that a part of America judges him a Nazi envoy, Gaston Henri-Haye, the new French Ambassador, stepped from an airliner here yesterday and shattered ambassadorial tradition by granting an immediate interview to declare that "France is free."

He was disturbed, he said, because pickets in New York proclaimed him a "Nazi stooge." He smiled wryly at "these rumors" of German-domination of unoccupied France and proclaimed:

"France is free, but free in a limited sense. Only 50 kilometers from Vichy, you know, stands the German army."

Very soon, said the new master of the big embassy at 2221 Kalorama road, the government is moving back to the Nazi-held Paris, the ancient capital of France, from which it fled before the German onslaught last June.

Huge Guns Duel Across Channel As RAF Smashes At Emplacements

By James MacDonald
Copyright by New York Times

London, Sept. 9.—Long-range British and German guns on the English Channel barked furiously at each other late today in a short but hot argument which was followed by Royal Air Force raids in which British bombers struck savagely at Nazi Big Berthas nested along Cap Gris Nez.

[Apparently the British air attack—"heaviest yet laid against the French coast"—failed to silence the German guns, for an Associated Press dispatch reported the trans-Channel artillery duel was resumed just before dawn Tuesday, after a four-hour silence.]

Tonight's big gun duel and subsequent harassing flights by the R. A. F. were believed by unofficial observers to be the direct result of the heavy all-night raids on enemy shipping gathered in German-occupied French and Belgian Channel ports.

The British raids last night were on a big scale and included a three-hour bombardment of Hamburg and attacks on Bremen and Emden as well as Ostend, Calais and Boulogne. Out of all of last night's raids London officials said 13 planes failed to return home.

British Return Fire

The Dover area shook tonight when German guns, seemingly located near the Cap Griz Nez lighthouse across a narrow stretch of Channel waters, belched their fire. Immediately afterward British guns replied.

Watchers in the Dover area saw orange tongues of flame spurting along the French coast illuminating the lighthouse. Spirals of smoke curled lazily skyward. About a minute later German shells thundered into this side of the Channel.

The Germans fired salvoes at two-minute intervals, paused 20 minutes and then opened up again with two more shots. Meanwhile, British guns blazed away in the direction of France but officials declined to permit publication of details of the activities of bombardiers manning the coast defenses.

Tracer Bullets Rocket Upward

After the long-range guns ceased firing R. A. F. planes departed in the direction of France and within a few minutes eye-witnesses in the Dover district saw lurid flashes as the bombs burst. The concussion of the bombs falling on German gun positions shook the ground on the British side of the Channel in what was considered the most violent raid yet delivered by the R. A. F. on German-held Channel territory.

Spectators saw numerous German searchlights raking the skies and tracer bullets streaming upward like a series of electric light bulbs.

Through Bad Weather

After R. A. F. flyers had carried out their orders to try to ruin the German gun sites at Cap Griznez, the Nazis retorted with some more shots that sent shells shrieking toward English soil, where they burst with a terrific crash. Pending a complete checkup, officials were unable to say exactly what damage

R. A. F. Raids Nazi Capital For 43 Minutes

Germans Promise Ten Times Worse Assault on London

By the Associated Press

Berlin (Tuesday), Sept. 10.—Berlin residents were driven to shelter by a 43-minute air-raid alarm early today as British bombers visited the metropolitan area.

Authorized sources said none of the raiders reached the central section.

High-explosive bombs fell on the northern fringe of the capital, damaging several apartment houses, it was said, but no casualties were reported.

Heavy antiaircraft fire greeted the raiders as they sped over the outskirts of the city, dropping flares to light up their targets.

Earlier German planes had roared away through the night toward England at 30 and 40-minute intervals, German authorities reported early today, while threatening a bombardment ten times worse than any London yet has undergone.

Three hundred Nazi planes participated in the Monday afternoon raids on the London area, despite unfavorable weather, they said, and clearing conditions favored the night attacks.

Thus far, the German tally sheet listed "more than 40" British planes destroyed Monday and Monday night, with 16 German planes missing.

Authorities acknowledged a British raid during the night on the strongly defended city of Wesermuende, at the mouth of the Weser River. Most of the attackers were

'Growing' R. A. F. Wants More Men

London, Sept. 9 (AP).—The air ministry appealed tonight for volunteers to serve as pilots, machine gunners and radio operators and extended the maximum pilot age from 28 to 30 years.

The announcement said that the "regular and adequate flow of suitable personnel" from home sources was needed "because of the continued growth of the R. A. F. which has been facilitated by greatly increased production."

Metropolis Lists 600 Killed, 2,600 Hurt in Week-End Aerial Assaults

By the Associated Press

London (Tuesday), Sept. 10. German bombers smashed at London last night and early today in a nine-hour and two-minute raid that demolished office buildings in the very heart of the city and laid a swath of devastation over homes and harborside in a third consecutive all-night bombardment.

The scope and fury of the onslaught were admittedly as great as those of Saturday and Sunday nights, which killed 800 persons and injured at least 2,600.

The blasts of 800 and 1,000-pound bombs, which ripped away several floors of buildings, were repeated.

The alarm, ending at 5:40 a. m. as dawn drew near, was surpassed in length only by the nine-hour and 40-minute alert of Sunday night and Monday morning.

One tremendous salvo in south London threw debris high in the air.

Bombers circled the city area, one of them at least four times, dropping the heaviest of bombs before veering off in the face of the frenzied antiaircraft cannonading.

Big Buildings Wrecked

[The United Press reported "big buildings in the heart of London" were torn apart by the terrific blasts of 500-pound bombs. Censorship prohibited mention of exact locations, but the dispatch managed to convey the impression that Fleet street and the Strand were suffering heavily. I mentioned a "world-famous street piled ankle deep with debris, a six-story building . . . its fourth and fifth floors blasted outward exposing helter-skelter office furniture."

[A correspondent watching the raid from the roof of the United Press building just off Fleet street was knocked down when a bomb ripped the front from a nearby building, the dispatch said.

[Sections "well known to millions of tourists" were smashed by high explosives, the U. P. said, and smoke enveloped the heart of the city.]

Appear "On Schedule"

The attackers appeared "on schedule" Monday night, set incendiary flares to light the targets of those to follow, and struck hard at the Thames-side wharves and warehouses. Then the raid seemed to be marking time.

But long after midnight the pace quickened, and the raiders seemed to come in successive waves.

Antiaircraft fire increased. A terrific barrage burst forth suddenly in central London. Shell fragments showered the streets in the heart of the city.

The surprise blast of antiaircraft fire came in the hour before dawn.

Bombs rocketed through central London and the outlying districts. One bomb overturned a streetcar, but authorities said there were no casualties.

The British Press Association reported that other bombs ripped into a children's hospital and a maternity hospital.

Bombs fell over a wide area of southwestern London.

(There are some factories in southwestern London, and also extensive parklands, including the famous Wimbledon tennis courts).

A hospital on the outskirts was struck and six houses destroyed in another suburb.

One suburban bus was struck directly after passengers and driver

History Made in 60 Seconds

First Group of U. S. Destroyers Delivered to British in Canada

Copyright by New York Times

An Eastern Canadian Port, Sept. 9.—In 60 poignant seconds history was made today. On a sun-swept ocean dock, 7,800 United States seamen were drawn up, the buglers sounded "To the Flag," the sailors snapped to rigid attention and the Stars and Stripes slowly fluttered down.

The first group of the 50 American destroyers had lost their nationality.

For an hour they were ships without a country, vessels without crews. The American sailors, with their flags rolled up, marched immediately to waiting Pullmans. Then up the long dockshed came the swing of marching feet. British tars formed in line beside the ships. Officers of the two nations stood together.

Bugles sounded the alert. Then as "Colors" rang out, the Union Jack rose at each prow, the white naval ensign at each stern. To every masthead fluttered the narrow white pennon showing that His Majesty's new vessels were in commission. The bugles sounded "Carry On."

The American officers shook hands with their British successors. The history-making ceremony was ended.

There wasn't a speech, there wasn't a band, there wasn't a parade. Simply bugle calls, a change

No Cry of 'Enough!'

London's Morale Still Intact, Demands for Reprisal Grow

By Raymond Daniell.
Copyright by New York Times

London, Sept. 9.—London's communications and public service business have been impaired but not disrupted by the intense indiscriminate pounding it has taken three nights running from Reichmarshal Goering's aerial demolition squads.

The morale of the people, however, is still intact and in the present phase of the war, where the only weapon the British have against superior armed might is the power of the little people to stand up unflinchingly, this is most important.

Probably no city in the world has ever taken quite this kind of punishment.

Jerzy Szapiro, New York Times correspondent in Warsaw just a year ago and a refugee from France, dropped into the office tonight and remarked that nothing he had experienced in those battle zones could compare with what the people of this city are undergoing now.

If rigid stoicism and the ability to withstand punishment and come up smiling ever won a war, the people of this great city straddling the Thames are winning this one. It is true that among many there are

500-Lb. Bombs Rip Buildings As London Counts 600 Killed

German Raids Called Fierce as Sunday's; 2,600 Are Injured

The Nazis also spread out over the southeast, the northeast and Midlands areas of England in the sporadic pattern of earlier raids.

Already, in combating an afternoon "feeler" raid on London, and in the early hours of the night onslaught, Britain's defenders reported 41 of 350 attacking planes had been destroyed, one of them a big new four-motored "super-bomber" in a blood-chilling daylight dogfight over the Houses of Parliament. Loss of 13 British planes was acknowledged.

The British meanwhile raised their score of Nazi week-end losses to 103 Saturday, and 11 Sunday, 31 of them by ground batteries.

Thousands of Londoners, to whom the war has become all-pervading and ever-present, paused to watch the bomber downed over Parliament during a late day alarm, then hastened home in anticipation of the regular night alarm which came at 8:38 p. m. (2:38 p. m., E. S. T.). 40 minutes later than the alarm that started Sunday night's 9 hour and 41 minute raid.

After a daylight calm of 12 hours, the sirens wailed at 5:09 p. m. The all-clear sounded at 6:24 p. m. (12:24 p. m., E. S. T.), and 2 hours and 14 minutes later the sirens sounded the second alarm.

Wharfs Disrupted

At Royal Air Force headquarters, air chieftains worked hard to find a solution which will counter the nocturnal attacks.

A hint of what has happened to the vast London docks, over which flowed a large part of the United Kingdom's food and war supplies, was seen in the remark of British observers that wharf activity has been disrupted.

They added that food and supply ships obviously will have to be diverted to other ports and the cargoes moved into the empire capital by train and truck. The Germans have concentrated a good part of their assaults on the sprawling London waterfront.

Communications Bombed

Communications centers and utilities were bombed also, but there was more damage to the working class districts around them than to the objectives themselves.

Homes, hospitals, warehouses and streets, lighting and gas systems were caught by the explosives.

Already hundreds of refugees have left the city for safety in the country. Other thousands are receiving aid from relief workers.

Reprisal Raids Vetoed

A high authority at the air ministry said the British assuredly would find an answer to the latest German menace of heavy night bombing. And, he said, the British would find it before Germany does.

The idea of reprisal raids on Germany was spurned.

"The best policy is to form a plan which will hammer the enemy the most and stick to it and not be led away into a tit-for-tat campaign," said one R. A. F. officer.

Three Hospitals Hit

The Sunday attacks were "severe" and "widespread," the air ministry said, but "so far as information is available, it is not anticipated that the number (of casualties) will exceed those of Saturday."

Heavy damage was done to many nonmilitary targets, the ministry added. Mentioned were three hospitals and two museums. Unofficial information was that two world-famed museums had suffered. (Censorship forbade their identification.)

"London has once more been the main objective of the enemy and its citizens have met the blind savagery of these latest night attacks with admirable courage and resource," the communique said.

More than 50 persons were killed when an aerial torpedo demolished a block of flats in an east London district Sunday night.

In another southeast London district seven persons were believed killed when a bomb hit their garden shelter.

Even as the rescue work went ahead, new formations of German raiders roared over northeast England during the afternoon.

London Douses Beacon Fires As Fast as Nazis Set Them

Deprived of Guiding Lights, Raiders Fail to Achieve Height of Fury Previously Attained, Eyewitness Declares

By G. H. P. Anderson
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 9.—From the rooftop observation post of the Associated Press building, shaken periodically by the heavy blasts of Nazi bombs, I watched tonight the firelit unfolding of the German air raid.

At first, like a small boy drawing the curtain in some summer barn theater, a single high-flying plane traced a trail of white smoke across the silvery sky three minutes after the air raid warnings sounded.

The smoke, possibly a marker for attack, lay edgewise in a lazy arc.

Then, suddenly, an antiaircraft shell flashed in the southwest; there was a bomb thud in the northwest, followed by the faint sound of gunfire; the drone of planes grew louder.

The night's drama had begun.

Momentarily, silence fell. A dog could be heard barking in the distance, while a horse clattered over cobblestones nearby.

Then an ambulance bell clanged for the right of way.

A scattering of lone planes circled about, dropping incendiary bombs at opposite points of the compass in an obvious effort to set beacon fires such as guided the raiders Saturday and Sunday nights.

But it appeared that tonight the Nazis were finding their beacons snuffed out almost as soon as they lighted them.

Another bigger plane sped overhead, seemingly in a high powered steady climb, with a sound like that of a power saw cutting through tough English oak.

A dozen bombs fell at scattered points.

Several planes came over central London, and the antiaircraft guns opened up again. Several bombs dropped at some distance.

Another lone bomber dropped a "Molotoff breadbasket" not far away.

This device, a big container that discharged many little incendiary bombs, was named by the Finns, who first felt its horror in the war with Soviet Russia last winter, and named it for the Soviet premier.

The big bomb opened with a blue-white flash, almost silently. Then its cargo of small incendiary bombs spread far and wide.

Activity increased slightly, but still was less in midevening than on Sunday night.

I dodged down from the roof when a cluster of incendiaries whistled past.

Suddenly five heavy explosions, like the boom of a mammoth bass drum, shook the entire building. I ducked instinctively.

Three of the city's most famous churches—one a landmark known to every American visitor—[Presumably Westminster Abbey!—were threatened for several hours by a fire started by high explosive and incendiary bombs in an extensive block of office buildings.

I left this roof, and running through the streets at the height of the raid I once had to leap into a doorway and at another time to throw myself full length on the pavement at the whine of falling bombs.

One bomb dug a deep crater in the middle of a street that usually is one of the city's busiest. The explosion hurled pieces of plate glass big enough to slice off a man's head.

Another bomb cleanly tore four floors out of a textile manufacturer's building, leaving the walls so bulging that it seemed they soon must topple into the street.

Firemen calmly played hose on the flames which had leaped up in the narrow street from one side to the other.

Yet in a very short time they had that blaze well under control.

sels, not counting several hundred tenders, supply ships, patrol craft and other auxiliaries.

They will bring into use a number of shipyards which have been unused since the World War and tax the shipbuilding facilities of the country to the limit. Considerable expansion of the yards will be necessary before many of the craft can be started.

Besides the seven battleships, which will cost close to $100,000,000 each, the orders provide for eight aircraft carriers costing about $47,000,000 each, 27 cruisers costing around $30,000,000 apiece, 115 destroyers to cost about $8,000,000 each, 43 submarines costing about $6,000,000 each and a repair vessel.

Following the awards, the department made public the following picture of the building program:

Type	Built	Building	Tot.
Battleships	15	17	32
Aircraft carriers	6	12	18
Cruisers	37	48	85
Destroyers	197	171	368
Submarines	103	82	185

The figures do not count the 50 destroyers being turned over to Great Britain, nor 46 former destroyers now being converted to different types. Under Navy practice, all ships under contract are listed as "building."

The Navy announcement also said that it was engaged in final negotiations for about 2,400 airplanes to cost about $108,000,000. Counting both cash and contract authorization, a total of $3,385,590,680 was provided at the last session for the Navy, it was said. At Hyde Park, Secretary Early said the War Department had informed the President it would let contracts for $524,000,000 worth of Army contracts within a few days.

Other defense developments yesterday included:

The House passed legislation authorizing construction of a $10,000,000 dry-dock in New York harbor, a $7,500,000 dry dock somewhere in the Caribbean, probably in one of the bases to be acquired from Great Britain, and appropriation of $8,180,000 to put the present dry-dock at South Boston, Mass., in shape. All three would be capable of handling the largest warships afloat or projected.

The House also passed a bill to permit Naval Reserve officers, who are graduates of Naval ROTC courses and have had a year's active service, to be commissioned in the Regular Navy. The chamber likewise approved legislation raising the age limit for entrance to the Naval Academy from 16-20 to 17-21, and to raise the pay of guards at Navy Yards and stations from $1,200 to $1,500 a year.

The Army acted to strengthen the defenses of the Caribbean by ordering the Twenty-fifth Bombardment Group from Langley Field, Va., and the Twenty-fourth Air Base Group from Kelly Field, Tex., to permanent station in Puerto Rico. The units now are at only skeleton strength, but will be expanded as planes now building are delivered.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, introduced a resolution calling for a $50,000 investigation by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee of charges some important defense industries are partially controlled by German and other foreign interests. He declared there was danger of defense secrets being disclosed to foreign governments as the result of such influences.

The House Rules Committee approved a resolution calling up for consideration in the House today a bill authorizing a $150,000,000 housing program for workers at arsenals and in defense industries.

Mayor LaGuardia of New York, chairman of the American section of the Canadian-American Permanent Defense Board, said that by the time the group had finished its job "the dictators of Europe will think twice, perhaps half a dozen times, before attempting to attack the Western Hemisphere." The group convened here at the Army War College for a two-day session.

Rumania Dictator Acts to Seize Jewish Schools and Synagogues

Antonescu's Decrees Start Nazification Of Country; King Carol Accused in New Charges of 'Sell-Out' to Axis Powers

By the Associated Press

Bucharest, Sept. 9.—Gen. Ion Antonescu advanced Rumania another step toward complete nazification today through anti-Jewish laws as fresh charges of "selling out" to the Axis powers were raised against abdicated King Carol.

The military dictator decreed all Jewish "communities" must vacate synagogues, hospitals and schools unless they can establish a membership of 400 in cities and 200 in rural areas. Rumanians expected vacated properties to be taken over by the state.

Another decree asserted that members of Baptist Advent sects, organized 18 months ago under British and United States influence, henceforth would be regarded as "without religion" unless they associated themselves with Catholics or a recognized Protestant church.

There were no anti-Jewish demonstrations today despite the government's action. Antonescu was reported to be clamping down on such agitation on the suggestion of Germany that it might interrupt commercial life and disrupt the flow of badly needed exports to the Reich.

With the government delving into Carol's private financial affairs, it was reported authoritatively a decree would be issued shortly prohibiting the transfer of any real estate amounting to more than 20 acres pending completion of the inquiry into the dethroned monarch's regime.

High sources declared evidence had been uncovered showing Carol was responsible for the German-Italian-dictated transfer of northern Transylvania to Hungary.

Following the forced cession of Bessarabia and Bucovina to Soviet Russia in June, these sources said the King wrote Adolf Hitler for protection of the northeastern frontier with Russia and promised in return to "make any territorial cessions Berlin might ask for."

The home of Mme. Magda Lupescu, who went with Carol into exile, was searched for 40 minutes today by 100 officers who departed with two small boxes.

Carol Seeks Refuge

Lugano, Switzerland, Sept. 9 (AP). Exiled former King Carol of Rumania spent a dreary day today in an apparently fruitless effort to arrange asylum for himself and his red-haired friend, Mme. Magda Lupescu, in France.

Carol is seeking to settle down on the French Riviera. But, as a second choice, he is understood to be considering the possibility of going to the United States, South America or the Portuguese island of Madeira.

The Vichy government, however, seeking to refrain from incurring German displeasure, was said to have shown slight eagerness to welcome Carol, who commands little sympathy in Berlin.

Pius Still Seeks Peace, Taylor Tells President

Assurance Comes In Verbal Message From Pontiff

By Douglas B. Cornell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 9.—An assurance from Pope Pius that the Vatican still strives for world peace reached President Roosevelt today three hours after he signed a bill providing the biggest peacetime armament fund in United States history.

A verbal message from the Pope was relayed to the Chief Executive by Myron C. Taylor, just back from Rome, where he was sent last fall as Mr. Roosevelt's personal representative to collaborate with His Holiness in efforts to restore peace.

Taylor made a report at a two-hour luncheon conference with Mr. Roosevelt at the latter's family home. Later, through Secretary Stephen Early, the President said the gist of the message from the Pope was that "the Vatican is doing everything it possibly can to bring about world peace."

Taylor also gave Mr. Roosevelt information he had picked up through the Vatican, with its church connections in every European nation. White House officials did not discuss the tenor of this data, but there was no denial that the outlook for peace appeared as gloomy as ever.

Before seeing Taylor, Mr. Roosevelt had been wading through a stack of official papers, among them the $5,251,486,392 defense bill.

The measure arrived only this morning from Washington, and the President signed it within minutes after it was laid on his desk.

The legislation, Early said, contemplates the largest expenditure of any bill to which Mr. Roosevelt has affixed his signature.

Legation Hears of Iremescu's Recall

Radio Reporter Tells of Shake-up In Diplomatic Corps

Sudden changes in the government of distant Rumania, sending King Carol II and his red-haired friend, Magda Lupescu, to Switzerland in hasty exit, had their repercussions in Washington yesterday.

Attaches of the Rumanian Legation, 1601 Twenty-third street northwest, were listening with interest last night to a news broadcast from Bucharest.

The Columbia Broadcasting System reporter, Spencer Williams, was describing changes that have taken place in the three days since iron-willed Gen. Ion Antonescu secured power in Rumania, installing Prince Mihai as nominal ruler.

Suddenly the group around the radio heard words that threw them into consternation.

The radio reporter told his listeners that Radu Irimescu, Rumanian Minister to Washington, had been recalled, together with the Envoys to a half a dozen other capitals in a general shake-up of the diplomatic corps.

A Post reporter arriving at the Legation a few minutes later found the staff nervous, worried and inclined to caution.

A secretary, who was so moved by the news he had heard that he asked that his name be witheld, said that no official confirmation had been received.

Irimescu, a legation attache said, was in the country for the day and could not be reached.

The military attache, Col. Dumitru Petrescu, who is an honorary aide de camp to Carol, had no confirmation of the news broadcast.

Irimescu, strong-jawed and forceful in manner, has represented Rumania in this country since April, 1938.

Successful in his home country as a businessman, Irimescu has drawn attention here for the business-like methods he has used in handling Rumanian sairs.

Decorated for service in the air corps during the World War, Irimescu came to his Washington post from the ministry for air and navy.

Formerly a student at Columbia University, New York, the Rumanian diplomat married Henrietta Maench, of Buffalo, in 1919.

Before the World War Irimescu was destined for an army life and pursued military studies almost to the outbreak of the conflict.

Immediately after the 1918 armistice he began a business career that culminated with managership of the kingdom's greatest industrial enterprise, the Resita Iron and Steel Works, in 1935.

Republicans Pin Hopes on England

Concede Prospects For Victory Will Dim If London Falls

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Political prophets who usually are long on forecasts at this stage of the campaign have gone bearish on claims pending the outcome of the Battle of Britain.

Highly placed officials in both parties yesterday were looking to London for national campaign cues rather than to the White House or Rushville or Maine.

Should England do down before November under the fury of the Nazi air assault, politicians in both party camps believe it would write an entirely different set of election facts and figures from those apparent today.

Republicans of some standing freely conceded that should London fall in the next month or two months, G. O. P. November prospects would be seriously diminished and Democratic election hopes correspondingly increased.

Should England survive and strike threateningly back, these Republicans rated their chances better than even. Some Democrats admit that the President in that event might have to take to the political stump on domestic as well as war issues.

State-by-State forecasts, usually a dime a dozen during the campaign "claiming period," have been conspicuously absent. The Republican National Committee has had detailed surveys made but has never released them. Nor has Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn permitted details of his campaign report to the President to sift to the public.

Outside of the Republican Congressional campaign committee's "goal" of 60 additional House seats, which contained no particulars of the districts to be captured, specific forecasts have been few and far. Although much data has been assembled, no claims have been recently advanced from either side on Senate seats at stake.

Organization Proceeds

Those prophets in a position to prophesy contend that information meticulously assembled, State by State, and good as of today, may be renedered valueless by a week's or a month's war turn.

Organization plans meanwhile were being pushed by both parties as though the campaign were being waged on a normal basis.

While Democratic Vice Presidential Nominee Henry A. Wallace stumped the Middle West on the farm issue, the Republican National Committee released Wendell L. Willkie's cross-country itinerary starting September 14, from Chicago.

Returning today to his Senate leadership duties, Senator McNary, of Oregon, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, is planning a half dozen more major campaign speeches.

Roosevelt Speaks Tomorrow

President Roosevelt, pursuing his strategy of aloofness from politics, was preparing a speech to be delivered tomorrow night before the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, with no word as yet from the White House on whether it will be "political."

If the speech to the labor group is "nonpolitical" and accorded free radio time, spokesmen for the Republican National Committee said they would make their own interpretation, and if they consider it political, will demand an equivalent amount of free time for their own candidate.

Willkie, it was learned, will be accorded free time by the broadcasting companies to respond to the President's recent Chickamauga Dam speech, which Republicans termed "political" and Democrats "nonpolitical." Willkie has not yet made a formal request. Republican spokesmen said he was waiting to determine the time and subject matter of his speech.

8 States Vote Today on Seats In Congress

By the Associated Press

Candidates for Representatives in Congress will be chosen today in primaries in eight States, Arizona, Colorado, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Vermont and Washington. They have a total of 47 seats.

Tomorrow Georgia will hold primaries to nominate for 10 House seats and New Mexico will name candidates for a Representative at large Saturday. Almost all incumbents in the ten States are seeking renomination.

Senatorial candidates are being selected in six States during this week's primaries. Three of the seats in contest are held by Democrats, two by Republicans and one by a Farmer-Laborite. Present members holding the seats are Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona; Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan; Shipstead (Farmer-Laborite), of Minnesota, who is seeking renomination on the Republican ticket, Chavez (Democrat), of New Mexico; Austin (Republican), of Vermont, and Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington. The latter is the only one not seeking renomination. He has been appointed a Federal judge.

Gubernatorial candidates will be selected by primaries in nine States. Five of the posts are held by Republicans and four by Democrats—R. T. Jones, Democrat, Arizona; Ralph L. Carr, Republican, Colorado; L. B. Dickinson, Republican, Michigan; Harold E. Stassen, Republican, Minnesota; Francis P. Murphy, Republican, New Hampshire; George D. Aiken, Republican, Vermont; Clarence D. Martin, Democrat, Washington; E. D. Rivers, Democrat, Georgia, and John E. Miles, Democrat, New Mexico.

Miss Perkins Greets Wives Of Union Delegates Here

Labor Secretary Guest of Honor at Tea; Praises Women for Zeal in Attending D. C. Convention of Teamsters' Group

Secretary of Labor Perkins yesterday gave 500 women something about which to boast to their husbands.

At a tea in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom she told wives of members of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America:

"I have greater faith in the teamsters' union now that I see that women come to the convention in such numbers."

She added that she had been told that 2,000 women were in the city for the sessions.

"A union that can catch the interest of the women married to its members has its feet on sure and certain ground," Secretary Perkins said.

Secretary Perkins stood in the receiving line with Mrs. Arthur Roland, of Washington, secretary to the secretary-treasurer of the Milk Drivers and Dairy Employes Local 246. Mrs. Roland is hostess to the women at the convention.

Once Secretary Perkins held up the line to speak to 4-year-old Charlene Capurro, 4, of Oakland, Calif., youngest guest at the party.

To the music of a string orchestra, the guests in their new fall dresses yesterday circled the tea table to look at the huge white cake embossed with the emblem of the union.

Other committee chairmen named by Mrs. Earl D. Fowler, president, are: Mrs. J. Whiteside, hospitality; Mrs. Fred Hess, membership; Mrs. Macon Ware, dinner; Mrs. Charles Moran, health and welfare; Mrs. E. M. Ward, grounds and property; Mrs. Malsom Smith, publicity and publications, and Mrs. D. J. Shear, historian. Further appointments will be made later.

Yield Is Greater In 'Birth Control' Of Strawberries

"Birth control" in the strawberry beds yields more and better berries, according to Dr. A. Lee Schrader, head of the University of Maryland department of horticulture.

He reported that tests where runner plants had been thinned out so that they rooted seven inches apart yielded 5,123 quarts per acre as against 3,599 for matted row plants. When the roots were thinned out to be 11 inches apart, the yield increased to 5,177.

Prince Georges And Montgomery Get Data on Draft

Montgomery and Prince Georges (Md.) supervisors of election yesterday received instructions in methods of preparing for conscription activities as soon as the conscription bill is enacted.

Registration of citizens will be carried out by the county election officials at the usual polling places in both counties. Volunteer workers probably will be used in the registration, Lieut. Col. Henry C. Stanwood, of the Maryland National Guard, said in a letter accompanying instructions.

"Strong feeling is developing in Congress in reference to having all local work done on a volunteer basis," Col. Stanwood wrote. "The feeling seems to be that when men are called to military service at great personal sacrifice, the selective service officials should be men who are willing to make an important sacrifice themselves by contributing volunteer services.

"We are advising you of the possibility so that you can begin thinking of obtaining voluntary registrars if that becomes necessary," the colonel wrote.

Green Pledges Aid to Defense And Draft

Teamsters Are Told Of Roosevelt Efforts Against Unemployment

In a speech peppered with pro-New Deal remarks, A. F. L. President William Green yesterday declared that "no man in America has more sincerely and honestly applied himself to the task of ending unemployment" than President Roosevelt.

Speaking to the fourteenth convention of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Green praised New Deal social legislation, pledged support to the Administration's defense program and "whatever conscription law is adopted," then added:

"I protest against the unfounded charges that our distinguished President has never done anything to remedy or relieve unemployment."

Teamsters Urged to Avoid Strikes

Fifteen hundred convention delegates, seated in Constitution Hall, applauded vigorously when Green declared that "millions of workers have been given an opportunity to earn a partial living through WPA and PWA." Indorsing the "expenditure of millions of dollars on public works," he shouted:

"What would we have done without it? Who can answer that?"

Daniel J. Tobin, president of the teamsters' union, called for changes in the union constitution to eliminate "cheap racketeers."

"There will be amendments submitted to this convention," he said, "dealing with such miserable, dishonest, unprincipled scoundrels who have used our organization for criminal purposes, who have gotten in under cover and brought the blush of shame to our honest membership."

He denied that "racketeering" was prevalent in the union, adding:

"One or two so-called cheap racketeers in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit or some other large city, are advertised throughout the Nation, so that the impression is thrown out that the international union is composed mainly of this kind of degenerate."

Tobin warned his members that there is a "point of saturation for wages and hours" and urged them not to ask for wage increases "that the industry cannot carry."

At the same time, he predicted "serious stoppages of work" to prevent "substantial reductions in wages," should Britain be defeated and European goods, produced with "slave labor," enter the American market.

Green urged the teamsters to avoid strikes in the interest of national defense.

"Let me ask you here," he said, "never to slacken down, never to slow up, never to interrupt—as far as is within your power—the progress of industry. We must show that democracy works and is superior to totalitarianism.

"Many wrongs exist in this country that must be righted. But freedom of speech, press, assembly and the right to worship in accordance with your conscience have values far in excess of wages, hours and conditions of employment."

Green said that "labor favors wholeheartedly the action of the President" in negotiating the exchange of 50 destroyers for British-owned naval and air bases in the Western Hemisphere, adding:

"While opposed to any involvement in the European conflict, we favor all support to Britain short of war in her efforts to defend democracy."

Pledging the "service, skill and training" of labor to defense, the A. F. of L. chieftain declared:

"We ask, however, that the splendid social laws adopted in behalf of labor should be maintained, unchanged and unamended."

Green repeated, in conclusion, his frequent offer to "sit around the conference table" with representatives of the C. I. O. to negotiate a settlement of the split in labor's ranks.

Secretary of Labor Perkins, at the morning session, discussed the program of New Deal reforms beneficial to labor, and outlined the labor-training program being carried out for national defense.

She said that employment today is "some 9,000,000 greater than it was seven years ago, exclusive of some 2,000,000 additional men and women engaged in WPA, CCC and NYA tasks."

Schurman Calls Third Term 'Most Fatal of All Disasters'

Ex-Ambassador Tells Senate Judiciary Subcommittee Germany's Experience With Hitler Should Be Lesson to America

A former Ambassador to Germany reviewing Hitler's rise to power warned yesterday that a third term for any President "would itself create the greatest of all emergencies and the most fatal of all disasters."

Jacob Gould Schurman, who was in Germany as Ambassador from 1925 to 1930, told a Senate Judiciary subcommittee that Germany's experience with Hitler should be an object lesson to America.

"In my opinion," Schurman testified, "a limit to the term and the entire duration of tenure of office of the chief executive is an indispensable condition of the safety and perpetuity of democratic government."

The subcommittee also heard the Rev. John LaFarge, S. J., associate editor of the Catholic weekly, America, testify that in his opinion no man was "indispensable" as President.

Father LaFarge urged a Constitutional limit on the Presidential term of office chiefly because of its beneficial effect on the people. He said they "should have the opportunity frequently to exercise their sovereignty."

Schurman never directly mentioned President Roosevelt's third term race. But he said that after 150 years of observance of the two-term tradition, "a new situation confronts us. Under our very eyes, but yesterday, that indispensable defense of our democracy has been put in jeopardy."

The former Cornell University president said there is no analogy thus far to Hitler's rise in American history.

"But let us imagine an American political leader of Bryan's gifts but with Hitler's love of power," he said. "Let us assume that he has already reached the Presidency and is driven by an all-consuming ambition to aim at continuance in that office beyond the two terms which custom and tradition and the advice and practice of Washington and Jefferson have invested with the character and force of a provision of the Constitution. Would the attainment of that goal be possible for him? In my opinion it would be."

Schurman said Hitler retained "the forms of legality" in securing control of the German Reichstag, and suggested an American President might control the Legislature and judiciary by legal means.

He declared that "experience in the same office is not the only thing, nor even the most important thing, among the qualifications requisite in a chief executive."

And he concluded that "if there is an emergency in the United States today, it is not greater than those emergencies which the people and Government have met and happily surmounted in the past."

Hearings on the Burke resolution to limit Presidential tenure in office will resume tomorrow. Among witnesses invited to testify are Dr. Frederick Cauder, New York constitutional lawyer; the Rev. Joseph Sizoo, of New York, formerly of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church here; Representative McLean (Republican), of New Jersey; and Mrs. Mabel Jones West, of the Alabama Democratic Women's Club. Chairman Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, also has asked Democratic Senators who opposed a third term in 1928 to appear.

Willkie Himself 'Not Appeaser,' Wallace Says

But 'Every Hitlerite Is a Republican,' Candidate Asserts

Hastings, Nebr., Sept. 9.—Henry A. Wallace linked the Republican Party with "appeasement" again tonight but cleared Wendell L. Willkie, the party's standard bearer, of the charge.

"I insist that Republicans are obstructing national defense, no matter what their spokesmen say," the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee declared in a prepared address here at the halfway mark of his two-day, 500 mile tour through Nebraska.

Wallace did not mention Willkie directly tonight, but at almost every courthouse and town square stop during the day he reiterated this quotation from his first speech this morning at Weeping Water:

"The Republican candidate is not an appeaser and not a friend of Hitler. I'll say too that every Republican is not an appeaser. But you can be sure that every Nazi, every Hitlerite and every appeaser is a Republican."

He charged Republicans in the House of Representatives were responsible for the Fish amendment to delay application of peacetime conscription 60 days.

"I said in my acceptance speech that the Republican Party is the party of appeasement. It is more than that. It is the party of obstruction. Again and again it has obstructed the efforts of President Roosevelt to defend this hemisphere."

"Their powerful influence must be kept out of the American Government in the dangerous days ahead."

This is the word picture Wallace drew of "economic appeasement":

"If there is a Hitler victory in Europe, there will at once be pressure for loans to the puppet governments which Hitler has set up in the countries he has conquered. The same business interests which unloaded the worthless bonds of Europe on American investors following the last war will push hard to repeat the profits they made then.

"Great numbers of businessmen in America will be crying for business as usual, for return to 'normalcy.' They are already looking ahead to business after the peace.

"Once embarked on the business of selling oil and food and minerals to Hitler's Europe, there is no turning back. The alternative becomes business collapse. So we must go on yielding more and more to Hitler's demands, tying ourselves more and more tightly to his labor mark, putting ourselves more and more under his heel. That road leads to slavery."

Proposed Excess Profits Tax Eased

Exemption of First $10,000 Benefits 20,000 Corporations

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Modifications of the excess profits tax bill in favor of private business were agreed upon yesterday as the Senate Finance Committee virtually completed its work of revising and simplifying the complex measure.

It will probably be brought up on the Senate floor Thursday.

In a move expected to reduce the tax yield by $19,000,000, the committee eliminated some 20,000 corporations from the excess-profits levy by allowing firms to earn $10,000 in "excess" profits before becoming subject to the excess-profits rates.

The House bill had set the exemption at $5,000, which would have brought 70,000 of the Nation's 500,000 corporations under the tax. The Senate committee change reduces the number of excess-profits taxpayers to 50,000 and brings the yield for the entire bill down to about $466,000,000 for the first year.

The Senate committee also knocked out of the bill a recently added special 10 per cent super-tax on corporation profits derived from armament contracts.

Restrictions Removed

Acceding to emphatic requests from the Defense Advisory Commission, the Senate committee removed from the House-approved bill certain restrictions on private manufacturers who were granted special tax treatment.

The restrictions, which had the approval of the Treasury Department, had been attacked by the commission as impairing the rearmament program. In the view of many observers, the "compromise" agreed on yesterday falls far short of Treasury desires.

This "compromise" removes from the bill all Government control over future disposition of plants erected for national defense production, if they were built entirely with private capital; but it provides, in general terms, for protection of the Government's interest in those private plants construction of which is paid for in whole or substantial part by the Government.

The provision in the House bill for five-year amortization of newly built national defense fasilities is left untouched. This privilege, held by the Defense Commission to be virtually indispensable for the arms program, means that manufacturers can deduct from their taxable income 20 per cent of the cost of the new plant for each of the next five years.

Official Approval Required

Under the House bill, corporations taking advantage of this proposal would not have been allowed to destroy or impair the new plant without Government consent—even if they had built the plant with their own capital.

The Senate committee substitute provision merely requires that firms receiving Government aid in the construction of new plants cannot be given the five-year amortization privileges unless the Defense Commission and Secretary of War or Navy certify that the Government's interest will be protected after the amortization period is over.

On request of the Maritime Commission, the Senate committee voted to suspend the 10 per cent limitation of profits on Government shipbuilding contracts. Similar restrictions on warships and airplane profits had previously been suspended for the duration of the excess-profits levy.

The committee's decision to double the excess profits exemption to $10,000 was taken on a vote of 14 to 4, with only Senators King, of Utah; Connally, of Texas, and Guffey, of Pennsylvania (Democrats), and La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, dissenting.

Petain's Ambassador Welcomed at Airport

of the Petain government to the United States kept his predecessor. Count Rene de Saint-Quentin, and members of the embassy staff waiting for nearly five minutes while he talked with reporters.

At the outset, however, he parried questions by reference to protocol, which requires a new envoy to make no public statement until he has presented his credentials.

The reoccupation of Paris by the government, he said, should take place within about two weeks, as negotiations between military representatives of Germany and France have virtually settled the terms under which the city will again become the capital of France.

The new Ambassador sadly admitted that the food situation in France is critical and that, as in so many phases of this war, the chief victims of dwindling supplies are women and children.

"Already," he said, "our stocks of fats and sugar are exhausted and these foods provide the vitamin A so necessary in the diet of little children and women.

"I hope to be able to make arrangements so we can once more import food from our colonies. I hope this can be done without prejudicing the interests of anyone, you or the British."

But the problem of helping to prevent famine in France—"I don't see how we can possibly get through the winter"—is only one of "1,000 details to which I must attend," he said.

Henri-Haye described himself as a "special" ambassador, a man with a mission more vital than that with which any other Frenchman has come to America.

Henri-Haye, member of the old French Senate and Mayor of Versailles, confessed he is "no diplomat." Then, he said:

"No Frenchman ever came to America from a France so unhappy."

Henri-Haye said he saw Gen. Henri Petain, head of the new French government, just before he left for America.

"I found him in perfect health," he said. "It is truly remarkable for a man of his age. No one in France could have done the job he did. No man is held in such respect by both Frenchmen and Germans"

GEORGES BERTRAND-VIGNE
Military Aide to New French Ambassador

The envoy was accompanied by Georges Bertrand-Vigne, a colonel of Alpine Chasseurs, the famous "Blue Devil" mountain troops of France.

Col. Bertrand-Vigne, whose wound stripe from the World War is a black bandage across his left eye, was a casualty at Narvik, the Norwegian ore port captured by Allied forces, only later to be abandoned. He was wounded during the attack, but his account of the battle yesterday was as matter of fact as an army communique.

"We captured the town in six hours," he said. "The Chasseurs did a very good job."

Col. Bertrand-Vigne came as the new Ambassador's military aide. An embassy spokesman said he probably would be the assistant military attache.

George T. Summerlin, the State Department's chief of protocol, observed while waiting for Henri-Haye's plane at the airport that outgoing and incoming Ambassadors usually do not meet, but the French Embassy blamed the war for this departure from custom.

Wartime communications, it was explained, are too uncertain and difficult to be entrusted with the necessary discourse between successor and predecessor. Furthermore, the embassy stated, the meeting of the two diplomats would emphasize the solidarity of their relationships with the Petain government.

Thus Count de Saint-Quentin gave Henri-Haye the benefit of his experience in Washington at a conference last night in the chancery at 1601 V street northwest.

Henri-Haye later moved into the embassy. Count de Saint-Quentin was to leave today for New York. In a few days, he said, he will return to France, before taking up his new post as Ambassador to Brazil.

Ex-Mayor Hoan, Milwaukee, Gets Defense Post

HOAN

Daniel W. Hoan, veteran mayor of Milwaukee who was defeated for reelection recently, has been appointed associate director of the National Defense Commission's division of State and local cooperation.

The appointment was announced yesterday by Frank Bane, director of the division.

The commission said that Hoan had been president of the American Municipal Association and president of the United States Conference of Mayors.

Hoane's experience, Bane said, fitted him peculiarly for the position; "in which he will endeavor to stimulate close cooperation among the various governmental bodies acting in the defense efforts."

Honolulu, Sept. 9 (AP).—A growing force of "bona fide" American citizens is being quietly trained here to cope with saboteurs in any defense emergency.

The Honolulu police, working with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, is training 1,000 citizens to patrol essential utilities and industries and prevent sabotage, thus leaving armed forces free to battle any attacker. When the first 1,000 are sufficiently trained, they will be replaced with other "loyal" groups, he said.

Plans call for the control of civilian minorities — Hawaii has 80,000 aliens out of a 430,000 population—by, first, the Army, Navy and Marines; and second, by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, combined with a large police force, Reserve officers, the National Guard and, more important, by thousands of antisabotage workers.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 9 (AP).—William S. Knudsen, member of the National Defense Commission in charge of production, and Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold, Army air chief, voiced satisfaction today after witnessing a Bell Airacobra pursuit plane whiz past them at 400 miles an hour.

Knudsen said he expected airplane production in the United States would be double the 900 planes a month now produced by the fall of 1941.

"I like that very much. That is a very nice number," said Gen. Arnold on seeing the ship flash by 20 feet from the ground. He had requested that the silver plane, built for the Army Air Corps, be put through its paces after he and Knudsen inspected it on the ground.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, citing "close relations" between Germany and American corporations supplying vital military products, asked yesterday for a Senate investigation of any industrial practices which might interfere with defense efforts.

Wheeler introduced a resolution which said:

"Information has come to hand that some large concerns important to national defense have deferred national interests to monetary considerations by giving preference to foreign munitions orders."

Detroit, Sept. 9 (AP).—Plans to prepare America's 30,000 to 40,000 chemists for war were announced today by the American Chemical Society.

The announcement said the move is made "at the request of the Executive Office of the President of the United States."

The plans are a census of all American chemists, to classify them so as to avoid the waste of scientific and technical brains which occurred in the trenches of the Allied armies in the World War.

Panama, Canal Zone, Sept. 9.—The strike of Panamanian laborers working on the Panama Canal virtually ended today, without any formal action being taken by the canal authorities on the reported demands of the strikers which never were actually presented. Over 75 per cent of the men resumed work today after the canal authorities issued an announcement that they could return without prejudice but that failure to report to duty would result in their discharge.

ployed to enlist.

"If that is done," he added, "you will inevitably bring up the old charge that 'this is a rich man's war but the poor man's fight.'"

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, an opponent of the bill, also opposed the 60-day trial of voluntary enlistments, terming it "intrinsically dishonest." Declaring it impossible to enlist 400,000 men in such a time, he urged:

"Let's give them their conscription now, and see whose right and whose wrong in the long run."

Published reports of an imminent "trade" between Senate and House conferees in which the 60-day delay proviso would be dropped, came up for discussion on the floor. Senator Barkley said that Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee, who was quoted in connection with the matter, had told him he had been misquoted.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, charged that the real purpose of the House provision for the 21-to-45 age limit is to "hold a club over every laboring man, a threat that, if they don't do as they're told, they'll be thrown into the Army."

Italy Raids British Fleet, Oil Supplies, Rail Life Line

Alexandria Reports Bombs Fell 2 Hours In Attack on Ships

By the Associated Press

Rome, Sept. 9.—Day and night air attacks on Britain's fleet in the harbor at Alexandria, Egypt, her oil supplies in Palestine and the Sudan, and the railroad that supplies her army along the Libyan border were reported today by the Italian high command.

Some of Britain's fleet and base installations were bombed in a night attack, the high command's communique said.

[Alexandria dispatches said bombs were dropped repeatedly in a two-hour effort to sink or damage some of the concentration of warships. One person was reported killed and several were injured.

[A British communique said a patrol from Kenya Colony, advancing north, had penetrated Italy's Ethiopian Colony for about 15 miles to Goral, where casualties were inflicted on native troops. Gorai is about 100 miles west of Lake Rudolf, on the Kenya-Ethiopian border.]

[In London the sinking of three Italian supply ships by two British submarines in the Mediterranean was announced by the admiralty.]

A refinery was hit in a surprise daylight attack on Haifa, Palestine, terminal of the giant oil line that feeds supplies from the Mosul fields, the Italian communique said, and extensive fires were set.

Oil tanks and a railroad station at Port Sudan, on the Red Sea, were objectives of another attack.

Italy also reported a second raid on the railroad line which connects Alexandria with Matrun, seaside town near the Egyptian-Libyan frontier.

British bombings of Mogadiscio, Italian Somaliland, Massaua, Eritrea, and Berbera, in Italian-occupied British Somaliland, caused no casualties and very little damage, the communique said.

British Raid Airdrome

Cairo, Egypt, Sept. 9 (AP).—British authorities reported tonight that the South African Air Force on Saturday raided a motor transport concentration and set fire to an airdrome at Mogadiscio, capital of Italian Somaliland. They said one Caproni plane was destroyed and four others damaged while another Italian plane was shot down.

London Morale Still Intact

beginning to be questions about why the Germans are allowed to have their merry way, for the recurrent bark of antiaircraft fire, even though purposeless, has a reassuring effect.

Its absence for long intervals has a disturbing effect and a good deal of emphasis was laid today in the British press on the strategic reasons why it is sometimes better not to waste ammunition by firing at blind targets when searchlights are unable to pick up scattered raiders too high for accurate aim.

The air warfare has now reached the third phase. The first was the attack on ports and shipping. The second was concentrated mass assaults upon airports near the Channel coast in an effort to drive fighter squadrons back to their second line of defense. The third and present one is an attempt to destroy the nerves and morale of the 7,500,000 people in this capital, heart and nerve center of a world-wide empire.

Whether it will be followed by an attempted invasion after continued pounding or whether the pounding will be intensified in the hope the people here will cry "enough" before those in Nazi Germany is anybody's guess.

Already there is an increasing demand for reprisals in kind upon Berlin and the official attitude remains that not one bomb shall be wasted on anything in Germany or in territory occupied by Chancellor Hitler's troops that is not deliberately aimed at a military objective.

That is not a decision dictated entirely by humanitarian feeling but it is based on the belief that killing old women and children will not win wars, while destruction of shipyards and ammunition and gasoline dumps will. The British still do not feel they can waste any ammunition.

Peace Group Plans 'All-Out' War on Draft

Attempts to Increase Ranks Are Being Made In Several Cities

Representatives of the American Peace Mobilization organization were en route to New York, Philadelphia and other cities last night in an effort to bring more delegates to Washington for an "all out" war against conscription later this week.

What an "all out" war meant, and specific plans of the organization were not divulged by Miss Marion Briggs, administrative secretary of the A. P. M., who arrived here yesterday to take charge of activities.

At temporary headquarters at 1116 Vermont avenue northwest it was a quiet day, with members of the group talking, playing cards, and a few dancing to a nickelodeon temporarily placed in one of the rooms.

"I think we did a pretty effective job in our work on Capitol Hill," Miss Briggs said. "A week ago there were only between 40 and 50 Congressmen opposed to the bill, yet when it came to a vote 149 were opposed. We can't take the full credit, however, because other groups worked hard to defeat it, too."

Charles V. Procell, National Maritime Union member who was active in sailors' strikes in Houston, Tex., in 1937 and who has been a leader in demonstrations here, said he planned to fly to New York last night to bring more delegates to Washington.

Michael Quill, president of the New York Transfer Workers Union, will arrive at Washington Airport at 11:25 a. m. today to confer with officers of the organization.

was done or how many casualties there were.

During the long series of British aerial attacks on the enemy, which began late last night and continued until early this morning, Hamburg came in for one of the worst bombardments it has yet had.

Flying through bad weather, both out and on the way back, wave upon wave of raiders, from 10 o'clock last night until 1:15 this morning, hurled many high explosive and incendiary bombs around the Hamburg dock area, starting many fires, according to the air ministry.

Pilots reported fierce blazes at the Blohm and Voss shipyards. Wharves and a railroad station on the north bank of the River Elbe were set alight while another fire started near Hansahafen, and still another near Altona.

During the raids on Ostend, Calais and Boulogne last night the air ministry said British flyers had to dart their way through thick antiaircraft barrages.

Ostend was selected for an especially heavy attack which began at 9 p. m. last night and lasted until 4:30 this morning, although the weather, in the words of one pilot, was "filthy with rain, sleet, thunder and lightning."

Salvos of bombs burst on Leopold Basin and barges huddled along the docks, causing big explosions and fires. The bombing crews estimated that one blaze raged over 10,000 square yards.

The air ministry reported a "successful" bombing of shipping at Calais and Boulogne. No details were given about the bombing of Emden and Bremen beyond the official statement that widespread damage was done to oil tanks and ammunition stores.

["A major attack" by British night raiders over Hamburg was acknowledged by informed German sources, the Associated Press reported. British bombs were said to have fallen on a densely populated residential section of the port, injuring four persons.

Aviation Trainees To Spend 3 Months In Civilian School

Eighteen civilians yesterday swore allegiance to the United States at the Army recruiting station here and were induced into the ranks of the United States Army, 11 of them as flying cadets.

The 11 Air Corps trainees will be stationed at a civilian aeronautic school for three months. If all tests are successfully passed, they will then be stationed at one of the Regular Army fields. The remaining recruits will go directly to an Army post.

Following is a list of the day's recruits:

Nazis Threaten to Give London A Pounding 10 Times Worse

driven off, they said, but gave no statement as to damage done.

The Nazi raids on London again had Thames River docks among their targets, the Germans said, and one flier reported:

"Tongues of flame are reaching high into the air."

Bomb squadrons took off for the English capital, their craft loaded with all calibers of explosives, as soon as improved weather was reported last night, German sources announced.

As soon as the bombing began along the Thames River south of London Bridge, flying observers wirelessed back to their bases that effective hits had been scored on the East India and Royal Victoria docks.

German sources insisted that these assaults were just the beginning of the "Battle of London."

The slackening of daylight raids was due to bad weather only, they said. The obvious German plan therefore is to continue these assaults over an extended time and with increasing intensity. It was emphasized that the concentrated force of which the Reich's air service is capable had not been reached.

London in particular and England in general will be the object of these intensified assaults, authorized Nazis declared.

"The fact that Reichsmarshal Goering himself is directing the attack shows that it will be continuous and will increase in intensity," said one Nazi spokesman.

Nazi fliers returning from Sunday night's raids on London said they were guided easily to their targets by fires started in the Saturday attack.

Utilities Blasted

Where there were no fires, they reported they resorted to new tactics of circling the city dropping flares, with bombers coming in swiftly to cut loose simultaneously with their cargoes.

The high command declared port facilities, oil tanks, gas, electric and waterworks and storehouses on both sides of the Thames were severely damaged by hundreds of bombs showered on the British capital.

German pilots conceded that British antiaircraft fire repeatedly rocked their planes and sent many home with as many as 30 punctures, but they insisted they were getting through with such heavy bombs that the explosions shook their craft as high as 12,000 feet.

The Germans declared, however, that Britain's pursuit pilots have been "decimated and worn out from the continuous stream of German raiders and are avoiding battle wherever possible."

"They are putting half-prepared student fliers behind the sticks of fighter planes while their bomber pilots are being reeducated as fighters," one observer added.

Photographs Show Damage

Berlin, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—Nazi authorities tonight presented photographs purporting to show that week-end assaults seriously crippled the heart of empire communications.

The first photo, taken in clear daylight from a height of 15,000 feet, showed the Thames in the West Ham and Woolwich areas, with smoke clouds rising at least 20,000 feet into the air in billows hundreds of feet thick. Flaming factories in the Royal Victoria dock section were plainly visible.

On the south side of the Thames huge fires raged in another industrial section.

A big freight ship was seen ablaze in Victoria dock.

A second picture showed oil tanks burning at Thameshaven. This shot also clearly revealed that other tanks had been burned out in previous raids. On the basis of this photo, it can be estimated that more than half the tanks there have been destroyed.

Another photo taken at 30,000 feet depicted Heinkel and Messerschmitt bombers flying above burning dockside at Millwall, where grain elevators, oil tanks and flour mills were ablaze.

Other pictures showed oil tanks and an oil tanker aflame at Purfleet-on-Thames and heavy smoke clouds and oil flames over Woolwich.

first general governmental reform of the District since 1878, are in substance:

Transfer of the department of weights, measures, and markets from the supervision of the police department to the license department—by Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts.

Safeguard clause to assure that reduction in personnel will be done in accordance with civil service provisions of bill—by Representative Schafer (Republican), of Wisconsin.

Two amendments by Representative Case (Republican), of South Dakota, to require approval by one justice of the U. S. District Court of all settlements of claims or suits by the Commissioners or payment of title company fees in the purchase of realty property.

Substitution of "member of the bar of the District" for "a bona fide citizen and resident" for a five-year period as a requisite for eligibility to appointment as a judge of the Municipal Court—by Representative Sasscer (Democrat), of Maryland.

Dirksen Explains Bill

The only opposition to the measure came from Representative Schafer, who argued for a while that outright self-government is the only solution to the problem.

Before the debate ended, however, he agreed that, in view of the unlikelihood that the House would accept suffrage legislation at this time, the Kennedy bill should be passed.

Although an hour's debate was set aside for consideration of the Kennedy bill, the only member who took time to speak on it was Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois. He explained its purpose and provisions and urged its passage.

All other time was taken up by members who asked questions of Dirksen and Kennedy and suggested amendments.

Objections Withdrawn

The legislation was threatened at the outset when Representative Holmes (Republican), of Massachusetts, raised a point of no quorum after Schafer had objected to Kennedy's request for unanimous consent for a division of debating time.

Only 265 members answered to the roll call as many had returned to their districts for the brief recess on national legislation. Among the absentees was Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee. He had given Kennedy permission to call up the reorganization measure in his absence after House leaders had withdrawn their objections.

No reference was made during the debate to the brief letter sent to Speaker Bankhead last May asking that action be deferred on the Kennedy bill because of objections from the Budget Bureau and the General Accounting Office.

Under provisions of the measure the District budget would be submitted directly to Congress by the commissioners. G. A. O. supervision of municipal expenditures would be restricted to post auditing.

Kennedy Commended.

The Kennedy bill proposes to enlarge the powers of the Commissioners and relieve Congress of many minor legislative duties. It also proposes to consolidate the scattered municipal functions, including all independent license boards and commissions, with 11 departments.

The measure, which has incorporated most of the recommendations of the "kitchen cabinet" as embodied in the Seal bill, has been emasculated of all civic controversial features involving the schools, libraries and parks.

Representative Dirksen commended Kennedy for his work on the reorganization bill and told the House that it was the result of "long and careful preparation." He expressed the opinion that its enactment would effect greater efficiency and economy in the operation of the District government.

"The District has grown like Topsy," he said. "This bill will give it a streamline effect."

Asked by Representative Stefan (Republican), of Nebraska, whether any economies would be made if the reorganization plan were adopted, Dirksen admitted that this "is pretty much to hope for" in view of the failure of the Federal Government to save any money from the recent reorganization.

Case Raises Question

"If it doesn't save any money," he added, "the taxpayers should get more for the dollars they spend."

Questioned by Representative Case regarding the elimination of Budget Bureau supervision of the District budget, Dirksen said that this action would "relieve the Budget Bureau of the burden" of reviewing municipal estimates and is in conformance with the budget director's recent memorandum to the Commissioners.

A few minutes later he suggested to Representative Lewis (Democrat), of Colorado, that the municipal tax structure might be revamped and the Federal payment might be reduced under the more direct Congressional control of the District budget.

Schafer first based his objections on the ground that the Kennedy bill would "give the bureaucrats the right to fire every employe of the District." After being assured that adequate safeguards are in the bill, he suggested that the "whisky snoopers" employed by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board be transferred to the Police Department.

The Wisconsinite shouted that Washington has "a vicious retail liquor monopoly that is as bad as the milk monopoly."

JAMES D. DAVIDSON, 82-year-old retired merchant of Long Beach, Calif., was under police protection in Kansas City yesterday after officers discovered him at the Union Station carrying $95,889.50 in bonds and checks in a topless hatbox. Canadians Shoot Down 10 Raiders in 'Their Greatest Battle'

By the United Press

London (Tuesday), Sept. 10.—An all-Canadian squadron of the Royal Air Force attacked a force of German raiders directly over the heart of London Monday and shot down ten of the Nazi planes in a battle over roofs tops of the city, the air ministry announced today.

The Canadian pilots, it was said, chased the Germans from London Bridge, near the Bank of England, to Hammersmith, on London's southwestern outskirts.

(A direct air line from London Bridge to Hammersmith Bridge on the Thames would carry the battle directly over Buckingham Palace.)

The exploit was described as "probably their greatest battle" thus far in the war. They destroyed three Dornier bombers as well as three Messerschmitt-100 fighter-bombers and four Messerschmitt-109s."

Air Raid or No Air Raid, Briton Likes Sausages

London, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—After a German bomb had broken a gas main in several places and flames were rising from the fissures, an unidentified Londoner arrived with a frying pan and calmly proceeded to fry sausages.

Two Correspondents Narrowly Escape

London (Tuesday), Sept. 10.—Two United Press correspondents narrowly escaped death from German bombs early today.

Dan Campbell, dictating an account of the raid from an observation tower atop one of London's highest vantage points, said that five terrific explosions had thrown him off his feet and "I am dictating this prostrate on the cement floor, expecting that any moment might be the end."

Sidney J. Williams telephoned at midnight and reported "a bomb just blew out all the windows of my home, shaking it and badly frightening my family, but there were no casualties."

London Raids Justified By Law, Nazis Claim

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Sept. 9.—That the attacks on London are justified by international law is proclaimed tonight by the Ns Kurier, official Nazi Party organ published in Stuttgart.

"London is a belligerent city," this paper announced, and in justifying this contention it destroys for all practical purposes whatever protection the term "open cities" may have afforded large civilian population centers in wartime.

London's status, the paper says, "was already established by Germany in the World War, when the Zeppelins launched their daring raids against London. What was legal then for the Zeppelins is just as legal today for modern bombers."

Shock of Alarm Kills Woman Trapped in Debris

London, Sept. 9 (AP).—For 15 hours rescuers labored to free a young woman trapped in the debris of a bombed tenement.

Fully conscious, she murmured to the workers, "it won't be long now . . ."

Just then sirens screamed a new warning. The girl gasped and died. Workmen said the shock killed her.

An hour before she died a hospital official declared she was "in excellent spirits."

Storm Pilot Heard In Plane Inquiry

Tells How Updraft Tilted Ship's Nose Toward Earth

A picture of what may have caused a Pennsylvania-Central airliner to crash with loss of 25 lives near Lovettsville, Va., August 31, was drawn from his own experience yesterday by Richard V. Rhode, aeronautical engineer of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

In testimony before the Civil Aeronautics Board investigating the P.-C. A crash, Rhode described an occasion on which he had flown into a storm cloud with results very similar to those which appear to have preceded the Lovettsville accident. He said he was flying as an observer studying the effects of turbulent air on aircraft structure in a plane different from the Douglas DC-3 which crashed at Lovettsville.

"We entered the cloud on its downward face," he said, "and immediately struck an ascending current of air which lifted us 175 feet in 15 seconds and left us nosed down with accelerated speed. Passing out of the updraft, we passed through a section of stable air and continued to pick up speed and lost altitude with the nose still down. When we entered the downdraft on the opposite side, the nose dipped still farther, our speed increased from 130 to 215 miles an hour, and we lost 1,000 feet altitude before the pilot could pull out."

Plane Hit Earth at Angle

Eyewitnesses of the Lovettsville crash agreed on hearing a noise indicating speeding engines just before the plane struck. P.-C. A. officials have testified it plowed into the earth at a steep angle and at high speed.

In almost violent disagreement with most of Rhode's conclusion was Ben O. Howard, of Los Angeles, Douglas test pilot and veteran of more than 10,000 hours flying. Any immediate opportunity to thresh out his differences with Rhode was prevented by absence of the engineer, who was forced to leave immediately after testifying to return to Hampton, Va.

He knew of no airline airplane, Howard said, which did not have sufficient control to prevent longitudinal deviation should it strike vertical air currents. In turbulent air, he declared, such airplanes would tend first to deviate laterally and directionally.

No Marks of Lightning

Rhode had testified, with regard to statements of eyewitnesses that they had heard a tremendous howling noise from the plane, that propeller tips, when they approach the speed of sound, undergo "a phenomenal and sudden increase in noise which is more like a pain in your ears than noise." Howard said that with the combination of engine and propeller on the DC-3, it is "mechanically impossible" for the propeller tips to reach the speed of sound.

As to the possibility that lightning struck the P.-C. A. liner, as suggested by several eyewitnesses, Howard said planes of commercial airlines are struck by lightning sufficiently to leave marks, about 200 times a year, with no effect on the pilot. A stroke of lightning sufficient to stun one or both pilots, he declared, would have left some mark on the plane in question, whereas P.-C. A. officials have testified none was found.

The only conceivable cause of a long steep dive such as that which ended in the crash at Lovettsville, Howard said, would be structural failure of the elevator or jamming the elevator controls by some foreign object. In the latter case, he declared, any pilot instinctively would set his stabilizer to correct for nose-heaviness. As for the former, he explained that Douglas airliners have flown 300,000,000 miles, equivalent to one plane flying day and night for 160 years, with no instance of elevator failure.

Other Pilots Hit Same Storm

Luther Harris, maintenance vice president of P.-C. A. said there was no evidence that the plane had been struck by lightning, or of fire before it crashed.

An affidavit from C. Earl Steele, Los Angeles pilot, read into the record by Fred M. Glass, presiding at the inquiry, told of Steele's experiences with a heavy storm cloud near Leesburg, Va., the afternoon of the crash. Steele said he left Washington at 12:05 p. m. and made two efforts to pass around the storm, eventually returning here for the night.

Three airline pilots had testified to passing through the same storm without encountering great turbulence, a fact to which the board gave attention when it asked Rhode, during his testimony, to describe an occasion on which a formation of four Army planes passed through a turbulent area with much disturbance to the two center planes and none at all to those on the outside.

The hearing will reconvene at 9:30 a. m. today in the Department of Commerce Auditorium.

Clean Sweep

the Senate seat.

At the same stage in the tallying, Sewall, 44-year-old banker and airline director, who was an American ace in the first World War, had piled up 135,379 votes to 65,778 for J. Redman, Portland lawyer and political columnist, who conceded his defeat in a congratulatory message to Sewall.

Mounting ballots in the three races for the United States House showed:

First District, 127 precincts out of 151: United States Representative James C. Oliver (Republican), 45,762; Peter M. MacDonald (Democrat), 19,466.

Second District, 185 precincts out of 209: United States Representative Margaret C. Smith (Republican), 46,762; Edward J. Beauchamp (Democrat), 21,967.

Third District, 252 precincts out of 269: Frank Fellows (R.), 45,098; Thomas N. Curran (D.), 22,587.

A drizzling rain that fell through much of yesterday kept the voting at an unusually low level, a fact at first hailed by some Democrats as a favorable sign.

Throughout the campaign, Republican leaders asked frequently for a clean sweep as a "help to Wendell Willkie," while most Democrats contended the election results would have but little national significance.

Representative Brewster, the Republican nominee for the seat of the retiring Senator Hale, Republican, asserted in his campaign that the seat to be vacated by the defeat of a single major G. O. P. candidate would be "hailed" by supporters of President Roosevelt. His Democratic opponent, former Gov. Louis J. Brann, came out strongly for a third term.

The gubernatorial contest, which pitted State Senate President Sewall, Republican, against Redman, Democrat, was fought out almst entirely on State issues.

Strict party lines also guided the views of the Congressional nominees on such issues as national defense, foreign policy, old Cage assistance and the New Deal's reciprocal trade program.

Brann, the only Democrat given two terms as Governor (1933-37) since the Civil War, had two subsequent setbacks. He lost a United States Senate fight in 1936 by 4,600 of 311,000 votes, a record, and a third gubernatorial term to Gov. Lewis O. Barrows (Republican) by 17,000 votes two years ago. Brewster, like his opponent a former Governor, tried vainly twice to get his party's Senate nomination before going to the House, where he has served three terms. Both made campaign statements against the Canadian trade treaty.

Redman, a Portland lawyer turned political columnist, based much of his gubernatorial campaign on a State fiscal scandal. He charged that others beside William A. Runnells, resigned State controller who was indicted on charges of embezzling $77,000, were involved in the loss.

Socialist Group Calls Washington 'Cauldron of Panic'

The Washington Independent Committee (Socialist) for Thomas and Krueger yesterday accused the War Department of taking two local incidents and magnifying them for propaganda purposes.

"Recent publicity given to alleged danger of sabotage to the water supply (here) was propaganda, evidently intended to make it appear that the Nation's Capital was in imminent peril of having the water supply cut off any day," a statement said.

Next, the committee referred to a recent theft of telephone cable.

". . . when someone—probably miscreant boys seeking some spending money—stole a section of telephone cable, it was made to appear that War Department communications were being sabotaged. The War Department apparently seized upon it in order to give the impression to the country at large that enemies are seeking to undermine the armed forces of the Nation," said the statement.

The committee contended that "scores of propaganda agencies, ranging from War Department-inspired groups to Fascist, Nazi and Communist 'fronts'—some inspired by immensely overstaffed embassies—make Washington a cauldron of panic."

port to Willkie's campaign, the nominee said, "he will have to answer that question." Ford came here in a private railroad car, and left immediately after the conference by automobile for Detroit.

One policeman on duty with Willkie said that Ford, whose visit was surrounded with secrecy, wore a red, white and blue Willkie button during the conference.

Willkie devoted much of the day to a conference with Samuel F. Pryor, jr., Eastern campaign manager, regarding a speaking itinerary following his Western tour this month. A decision will be reached soon as to whether Willkie will go first into the Midwest or into New England early in October.

Pryor told reporters that the "campaign organization is coming along splendidly in the East." Willkie, seated on his porch steps, supplemented this by saying:

"The Republican organization, as well as the Willkie clubs and the Independent Democrats, is whipping into shape very rapidly. We have checked 25 States in the last couple of days, and we don't know where there is any letdown."

To Study Draft Bills

The candidate, in reply to a question, said he had not yet studied the compulsory military service bill as passed by the House and would withhold comment until he could compare it with the Senate measure.

A reporter asked Willkie: "Are you going to ignore Mr. Roosevelt as he is ignoring you?"

"I have a hunch," the nominee replied, "that before the campaign is over, Mr. Roosevelt won't ignore me."

Water-Carrier Bill Approved By Senate

Measure to Regulate Inland and Coastal Ships Voted, 59-15

By the Associated Press

A bill to bring inland and coastal water carriers under Federal regulation similar to that now covering motor and rail transportation won final Senate approval yesterday by a vote of 59 to 15, ending a legislative controversy of nearly two years.

President Roosevelt's approval of the measure was regarded in Senate circles as likely to follow. The bill had its origin in the recommendations of a special committee of employes and employers appointed by Mr. Roosevelt in 1938 to make recommendations for remedying the railroad's financial situation.

Passed by both Houses last year, the bill was sent to a joint committee in an effort to work out a compromise between House and Senate versions.

First recommendations of the group were rejected by the House, and the bill which passed yesterday was a second effort at compromise.

Clark's Contention Rejected

In its final form the bill would require compensation up to four years for workers who might be displaced by consolidations and reorganizations of transportation systems.

Before approving the bill the Senate voted down, 51 to 23, a contention by Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missiouri, that the joint committee had violated Senate rules in redrafting it.

Clark declared the "sole purpose" of the bill was to bring about a condition where there would be "only a few boats on the rivers and a few boats engaged in intercoastal transportation and the railroads will own them."

The same thing, he added, would apply to motor transportation.

Proponents of the legislation tended that it would eliminate "unfair" competition by waterways and provide equality of regulation for all types of transportation.

Would Create 3-Man Board

Inland, coastwise and intercoastal water carriers, except certain types not competitive with land transportation, would be brought under regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Foreign commerce would be left under the Maritime Commission.

The present requirement for reduced rates on Government traffic over the so-called "land grant" railroads would be repealed, except for military and naval traffic.

The measure would create a three man board of investigation and research to be appointed by the President. The board would investigate the relative efficiency of each type of carrier for each kind of transportation and the extent to which each type has been subsidized by public funds.

New Destroyer Visits Navy Yard

A new destroyer, the U. S. S. Benson, tied up at the Navy Yard dock yesterday for a visit until tomorrow.

Navy Yard officials said the Benson came here from Guantanamo on a shakedown cruise and will be inspected by designers and Navy officers.

The Benson is commanded by Lieut. Comdr. A. L. Pleasants.

The widow of Admiral W. S. Benson, for whom the destroyer was named, will be received by the ship's officers at the Navy Yard at noon today, it was announced.

The destroyer, it was said, will proceed up the coast after leaving Washington.

The Political Arena

Ashurst Faces Major Issue on Draft Stand In Primary Election

By the Associated Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Sept. 9.—Senator Henry F. Ashurst, who opposed peacetime conscription, stakes his political future in the Democratic primaries tomorrow against three opponents who have made his opposition to the draft bill a major issue.

ASHURST

Failure of the Democrats to file nominating petitions left the ballot without the names of Democratic Presidential electors and led to a write-in campaign with the Willkie Democrats challenging three other sets of electors who are avowed Roosevelt supporters.

Should the Willkie slate win, the Democratic electors would be pledged to cast Arizona's vote for the Republican candidate even though the Democrats should carry the State in November.

Representative John R. Murdock, seeking the Democratic nomination for a third term, has three opponents who directed most of their fire against Murdock's vote against Congressional deportation of Harry Bridges, Pacific Coast labor leader, as an alien.

Robert Stripling, Dies Committee clerk, said yesterday a committee survey showed many cases of irregularities in names signed to a petition filed by the Communist Party for a place on the Presidential and Vice Presidential ballots in Kentucky.

He said the committee had sent letters of inquiry to each of the 2,032 named persons whose signatures appeared on the petition and that 318 of the letters were returned unclaimed.

Stripling said other results of the survey showed:

Names duplicated, 658; names signed without knowledge of the person, 202; number of petitions misrepresented, 13; signers who admitted signatures, 6; names of deceased persons, 3.

New York, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Roosevelt-Wallace ticket will carry Missouri, Florida and Maryland this fall, in the opinion of Democrati: leaders from those States who conferred today with Edward J. Flynn, Democratic National chairman.

Gov. Fred P. Cone of Florida said: "Florida is not alone safe for the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket, it is absolutely secure."

Truman B. Cash, Democratic campaign manager for Maryland, told Flynn that "the few Maryland Democrats who are now shouting for Willkie are the same so-called Democrats who supported Landon in 1936."

Congressman Richard M. Duncan (Democrat), of Missouri, predicted that President Roosevelt and the Democratic ticket would carry Missouri "by a plurality of from 250,000 to 300,000 votes."

Joseph W. Martin, Republican National chairman, said yesterday that his party must take the lead in combatting "fraudulent voting in the boss-ridden areas of corrupt politics."

"The conspicuous centers of vote manipulation are well known," Martin said without naming them.

The chairman's statement was made after a meeting of Republican Congressional committee members with George F. Barrett, Republican candidate for attorney general of Illinois. Barrett explained to the group, an announcement said, the operation of a "stop vote fraud" procedure which he had instituted in Chicago.

Census Force Pushes Civil Service Plea

Temporary Workers Ask Senate Backing For Mead Amendment

Approximately 200 temporary employes of the Census Bureau went to the Senate Office Building yesterday to urge support of the Mead amendment to the Ramspeck civil service bill which would grant them civil service status.

The presence of so many persons crowded in the entrance way to the building passed off without incident. The census workers, emissaries from Commerce Department Local 23, United Federal Workers of America (C. I. O. affiliate) entered the building in individual groups to wait on Senators from their home States.

John Brinton, chairman of the union local, said that about 40 States were represented in the delegation.

"The Census Bureau has added approximately 9,000 temporary, indefinite employes, almost all of whom were appointed from civil service registers of various kinds. These employes, selected as the result of regular competitive examinations, have been appointed with the prospect of serving two or more years in the bureau, during which time they will have acquired knowledge and skill of particular value in work within the Government service.

"Under the present arrangement, the Federal Government will not benefit from the training given these employes once the census work is completed. This results from the fact that although appointments were made from civil service registers, the appointees cannot acquire civil service status which would permit them to transfer to other Federal agencies."

Curb Emotions In Hunt for Spies, Hoover Asks U. S.

Milwaukee, Sept. 9 (AP).—J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, today asked citizens to curb their emotions in the search for Fifth Columnists.

"The surging wave of patriotism which followed the declaration of a limited national emergency has its dangers," Hoover declared in an address before the International Association of Chiefs of Police, in convention here.

"The vigilante method is distinctly contrary to American ideals of justice," he said. "Citizens groups could more effectively and expeditiously achieve their patriotic purposes if their energies were directed toward strengthening and supporting the law enforcement agencies in their communities rather than in seeking to take over their duties and powers," he asserted.

"Night and day local officers and those of the FBI are quietly working in the closest cooperation in investigating complaints of activities allegedly inimical to our Nation's interests," Hoover said.

Defense And Relief

The registration of the country's idle man power, just completed by the National Defense Commission, will complement the conscription of men for military training. Of course, the unemployed will not be drafted into industrial service. There is no need for that. The great majority of them are eagerly awaiting the offer of a job in the national defense program.

Yet there are many similarities between these two immense problems of securing personnel for defense. In each case men must be carefully selected on the basis of fitness and adaptability. In each case they will need special training for the tasks they are to perform.

No doubt many skilled workers now idle can be employed in armament plants, in the construction of Army camps and similar work without special schooling. But the demand for skilled workmen in various fields is certain to exceed the present supply. Adequate training of these workers is no less important than the drilling of recruits in the technique of combat.

Fortunately, the Defense Commission has not been content merely to catalogue our surplus man power. It is also fostering extensive training programs integrated with the prospective need for skilled workers in the various defense industries.

These activities again call attention to the fact that the Federal Government is creating an enormous number of jobs. Mobilization of the National Guard as well as the forthcoming draft will leave many vacancies to be filled. Probably a million men will be absorbed into the armed forces by next spring. Some officials estimate that 4,500,000 additional men will be employed in all segments of the defense program by next summer.

This means, of course, that the Government will be doing more for the unemployed than it has ever done before. A considerable part of the $15,000,000,000 which Congress has appropriated for preparedness will find its way into the pockets of workmen. Those benefits will not be diminished because the first objective of this spending program is national defense rather than the creation of jobs.

The emphasis has shifted from "made work" to essential work. As the essential work expands the "made work" should automatically be contracted. There is no place in the new setup for the WPA as it has heretofore existed. Insofar as that agency is building airports and performing other tasks valuable from the defense standpoint, it may continue to operate on a limited scale. But this vast expansion of defense jobs at an enormous cost to taxpayers leaves no excuse for Federal work relief merely for the sake of creating jobs.

Where relief continues to be necessary, most of the burden will have to be shifted to the States and local communities. The national contribution will be supplied in very generous measure through the defense program.

Art And Evolution

Archeologists are always upsetting our notions of change in human affairs. Discoveries in Arizona indicate that Indians of long ago not only were confirmed devotees of mural art, but even conducted their own variety of WPA projects. They painted over some walls as many as 30 times.

So the ancient inhabitants of this continent must not have been so different from us after all. Perhaps the pueblos were split from cliff to cliff by storms that arose when a Zuni artist inserted the face of the ruling Inca in one of his ceremonial paintings.

It may be that, while no one watched, an Aztec used his brush to convey a subtle message urging the Toltecs to regain their former glories. Perhaps translators from foreign tribes were called in to verify the insidious inscription before it was smeared over. Probably stone axes were wielded on some Tano mural in which appeared a symbol of the Keres tribe.

There is one point for emulation in the art that blessed the mesas. Archeologists who uncovered the successive layers of prehistoric pigment report an evolution took place from crude figures on the bottom layer to beautifully composed pictures on the outer coat. We are not starting with much in some cases, it is true, but let us hope that delvers of the future, washing down our crumbled walls, will not find the Indian process to have been reversed.

A Pleasant Surprise

Passage of the District reorganization bill by the House, without a dissenting vote, is as welcome to most Washingtonians as it is surprising. The perfunctory approval granted the bill after a brief debate made the labeling of the measure as "controversial" by House and District Committee leaders somewhat ridiculous.

Credit for resurrecting the legislation, as well as initiating it, goes largely to Representative Kennedy, of Maryland, who continued his fight for reform of the District government after he had failed to be renominated in his Baltimore district. This perseverance is particularly commendable, as Mr. Kennedy had good reason to believe that his interest in District affairs was used against him in his campaign at home.

The Kennedy bill, while a compromise between the original proposals of Griffenhagen and Associates and the counter-recommendations of the local Commissioners, is a long step forward in the direction of better government for the District.

Its three most important provisions would (1) broaden the powers of the Commissioners; (2) eliminate Budget Bureau supervision over the District budget; (3) minimize overlapping functions of the municipal government through a departmental reorganization.

If enacted, the measure would effect the first general shakeup of the hodge-podge agencies that serve as a local government here since the present organic act was adopted in 1878.

Senator King, whose interest in District governmental reform even precedes that of Representative Kennedy, is expected to carry the measure over the next legislative hurdle. As the House District Committee eliminated practically all controversial provisions, the bill should require no further public hearings.

One paragraph in the measure, which Representative Holmes tried unsuccessfully to eliminate, might well be removed by the Senate District Committee. It is the authorization for the Commissioners to request the President to select a District health officer from the Army or Navy Medical Corps or the Public Health Service. While permissive, the authorization could be used to oust Dr. Ruhland at any time the Commissioners wished.

This provision is entirely out of harmony with the central purpose of the bill, which is to give the District a larger measure of control over its own affairs. The need is for less and not more Federal meddling with local problems.

With talk of Congress adjourning this month, there is no time to lose if the Kennedy bill is to be passed by the Senate. Unless the Senate District Committee takes advantage of this opportunity, the work of two years will be lost. All action by one house alone will be nullified at the expiration of the present Congress. The time for the Senate to manifest its unquestioned interest in District reform is at hand.

Housing Dilemma

Congress has clearly recognized the need of making some special arrangement for defense housing. Yet there seems to be a great deal of confusion as to what agencies should be assigned the job and how the projects should be managed when completed.

An amendment to the $5,000,000,000 Defense Appropriations Act makes $100,000,000 available to the President for emergency housing. That fund is to be allocated to the War or Navy Departments in accord with their respective needs. Those departments may utilize the services of local housing authorities or other agencies in getting the actual work done.

Upon completion of such projects they could be rented to enlisted men in the armed services or to workers engaged in essential defense industries.

At least this authorization has the virtue of being flexible so far as using the money where it may be most needed is concerned. The Army and Navy will be able to select in each case the agency apparently best qualified to provide emergency housing of the type required. In one respect, however, it is extremely inflexible.

The small cost of such projects may not exceed $3,500 per dwelling unit. That limitation will probably give rise to no difficulty in most parts of the country. But in Washington it is very doubtful whether new homes can be built under this amendment without a serious letdown in standards which the Alley Dwelling Authority has thus far maintained.

In some instances it will doubtless be found desirable to build temporary structures to house defense workers and enlisted personnel. When new houses are to be constructed in cities overrun with slums, however, it is a pity to invest public money in projects that are certain to become slums within a few years. The public interest can be much better served by building permanent homes for temporary use by defense workers.

If it is impossible to produce such housing here, within the limitation imposed by Congress, Washington will face a real dilemma. For the alternatives will then be neglect of defense workers in the District or construction of new slums that will have to be demolished a few years hence.

Not Forgetting Egypt

The violent aerial attack which Hitler has unleashed against London presages, the British believe, an attempt at actual invasion of England. In any event, there is little doubt that the titanic Battle of Britain has reached a critical and, it may be, decisive stage.

It is all the more significant, therefore, that the British have seen fit to reinforce their garrisons in the Middle East. A dispatch from Cairo tells of the arrival at an unnamed port in Egypt of several thousand troops, including Australian aviators and veterans of the fighting in Flanders and France.

Apparently the British high command feels that there are now a sufficient number of trained men under arms in England to take care of any invading force which Hitler may attempt to send across the Channel. Its action also suggests, however, that the London government regards the Mediterranean and East African sectors as of vital importance.

Except in British Somaliland, which was evacuated after a fortnight of fighting, the British, though greatly outnumbered by the Italians, appear to have more than held their own in the Mediterranean and the Middle East. Gibraltar and Malta are still safely in British hands and there has been no serious challenge to British sea power anywhere in the Mediterranean. The convoy carrying reinforcements to the British Middle Eastern garrisons reported that it did not encounter a single Italian warship.

Mussolini is apparently relying entirely on his air force to harass British communications in the Mediterranean. And so far the long-threatened Italian thrust in the direction of the Suez Canal has not taken place. The British may have strengthened their forces in that vital area in fear that an attack will soon be made. Or it is possible that they hope to take the offensive themselves.

Everything depends, of course, on the outcome of the present German attempt to deal a knock-out blow to the British. If that attempt succeeds, the British position in the Mediterranean will become untenable. But if it fails, Great Britain may be able to direct more attention to the weaker of the Axis partners.

It speaks volumes for the dogged determination of the British that, at this critical juncture in their history, they are confidently planning for the future.

Music Everywhere

A hat company in Sunbury, Pa., has hit on a novel substitute for the ear-splitting noise which customarily summons workers to their morning task and releases them at eventide. Replacing the whistle is a battery of amplifiers which start the day with "Gold Bless America" and end it with "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The patriotic note is admirable, but even wider cultural possibilities lie in the Sunbury innovation. Whatever is applicable to factory whistles should also be feasible with school bells, street car signals, police sirens and desk buzzers. We could be a Nation governed by music.

Imagine a life in which violators of traffic laws would be halted by strains of "Careless," office boys might respond to a rendition of "Too Tired," and even the dourest stenographer could be kept in a good humor by a typewriter which played "Kitten On the Keys!" As for unwelcome suitors, a door bell ringing out "Annie Doesn't Live Here Any More" could have real usefulness.

Architecture And Bombs

From the Hartford Courant

Modern residential architecture has its critics in this country, and extremely vocal they are, but the recent air raids over England have produced a new criticism. The new houses may be everything their architects say they are—convenient, easy to build, functional and, could their parts be turned out by mass industry, cheap. But, an English critic reports, their flat roofs make them look like factories from the air, and they are in consequence more likely to be hit by bombs than are homes of the conventional type.

So the gingerbread and false turrets of the Victorian houses had their merits after all. They looked like nothing in heaven and earth, which was—or is now— their single virtue. They cost like fury, they sprung leaks at the most inconvenient places, they had neither beauty nor dignity, but no one could possibly mistake them for what they were not. It took an army corps of servants to keep them clean, they were fiendishly hard to heat and the red and green glare from their stained glass windows gave even the healthiest lodger the symptoms of an acute liver attack. But even an airman 5 miles up couldn't be fooled by them.

Still, perhaps their virtues are exaggerated. It is not impossible that a pilot looking down at a Victorian house would be so overcome with horror at the sight that he would let his bombs go, even though his mission was an arms factory. It may be that in Victorian architecture lies the defense to bombers.

Poetical Yardsticks

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In an editorial in The Post this morning I note your reference to the need for a yardstick to measure the political content of a public speech, particularly a Presidential utterance in relation to free radio time. You quote, for example, the old English verse:

Not drunk is he who from the floor
Can rise alone and still drink more,
But drunk is he who prostrate lies
Without the power to drink or rise.

Then you go on to say: "Why don't the broadcasters offer a prize to poets for a similar yardstick to measure the political content of Presidential speecnes?" I'm not a poet, but here's my entry:

Not political is the speech that sways
Or boasts, or cuts or rips or flays;
Political only is the one to rise
Full well within impeachment size.

BYSTANDER.
Washington, Sept. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You want a yardstick for politicians' speeches? But of course!

No politics speaks he who from the throne
Can cast unscathed full many a stone;
But politics quacks he whose well-aimed darts
Expose the sham of shallow hearts.

'Tis not for us to question why
All good blind followers just do and die;
If you are in, the truth you tell;
If he is out, he lies like hell.

Help England Now

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It should be destroyers and more destroyers and planes and more planes for England, for she is fighting the world's battle for freedom.

Since liberty is God-given, no man can violate another's liberty with impunity; hence Hitler and all of his ilk are riding for a certain and terrible fall.

Health Funds

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial commending the District Health Department for its splendid accomplishments during 1939 on the "slender appropriations" granted by Congress was indeed worthy of the attention of all residents of Washington. The health officer, Dr. George C. Ruhland, under the handicap of inadequate funds, has undoubtedly established a fine health record for the District of Columbia.

I was particularly interested in that part of the editorial which stated: "The long fight against tuberculosis, carried on in the face of hindrances, was still a winning one. The rate of fatality was cut from 94 per 100,000 persons in 1938 to 87 in 1939."

In this connection I think it only appropriate that it be publicly recorded that during the fiscal year ending last July, the District Tuberculosis Association contributed $8,685 to permit certain necessary functions of the Bureau for Tuberculosis of the Health Department not appropriated for by Congress.

It is, to my mind, a sad commentary that a municipal agency is forced to rely on a private charity organization for supplementary funds to carry on a vitally important work in the very heart of the United States Government. I believe the people of Washington and the press could devote their efforts to no better cause than urging Congress to protect the health of the people who have no voice in how they are governed. We should keep in mind, particularly at this time, that only a people physically fit can consider themselves prepared for any eventuality.

MRS. ERNEST R. GRANT,
Managing Director, District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association.

Trade To The South

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While our Nation is mindful of being impregnable to attack from the military standpoint, our thoughts should also be directed to economic invincibility. Our security in that line lies to the south. There ought to be immediate conference with those Americas whose growing seasons are antipodal to ours. There should be a prompt discussion of a reciprocal trade of planes and other items we can supply for food, etc., that, heretofore, we have purchased in Europe.

Turning to 1938 we find these items brought from that continent which can easily be grown by our southern neighbors: We imported in that year 650,000 pounds of butter, 37,784,000 pounds of cheese, 7,785,000 pounds of raw wool, 123,074 pounds of cocoa, 1,185,000 pounds of flax, 1,847,000 pounds of cherries, 60,000 boxes of lemons, 5,426,000 pounds of olives, 4,824,000 pounds of currants, 5,864,000 pounds of figs, 119,521,000 pounds of malt, 1,912,000 pounds of rice, 3,037,000 pounds of nuts, 1,559,000 pounds of rape, 156,153,000 pounds of olive oil, 11,512,000 pounds of peanut oil, 3,337,000 pounds of soy bean oil, 55,379,000 pounds of canned tomatoes and 42,109,000 pounds of tobacco. Excepting as to flavor perhaps of the last item, all these can be grown in South America.

The farmers are now planning for their spring which soon arrives. And at once they could consider flax, malt, rice, rape, peanuts, soy beans, tomatoes and tobacco. The other products could be gradually provided for. Then, too, there are the poultry supplies we have been acquiring from the Netherlands.

Campaign Issue

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Lindley said in his column for September 2 that there was no clear cut issue in this Presidential campaign. This statement of the New Dealers is a remarkable example of self-satisfied misrepresentation.

Not since 1860 has there been such a clear cut, vital issue in a Presidential campaign. It might be stated as: "Should the American people perpetuate and legalize Roosevelt's idea of a one-man government."

For more than seven years President Roosevelt has persistently tried to set up a Presidential autocracy in place of our American Representative Republic.

Without attempting to make a complete list of his devices, we can all remember the following: 1, to gain control over appropriations he got the House of Representatives to vote huge "emergency" appropriations to be spent at the President's discretion; 2, he got the Senate to surrender its voice in treaty making by having it accept a law creating the fiction that "trade agreements" are not treaties and therefore not subject to Senate ratification; 3, he tried to do away with judicial review of his measures by proposing legislation to give him power over the Federal courts; 4, because some members of Congress had the audacity to oppose him and some of his measures, he prescribed these persona non grata who were up for reelection in 1938; 5, his recent domination of a national party convention is an all-time record for political autocracy.

The issue for 1940 is not merely a third term, but a third term for a President who believes in Presidential autocracy and in personal infallibility.

On Fascist Propaganda

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to make some observations with reference to the effect of Italian Fascist propaganda in the United States and on the calling of names of the most insulting and damaging kind, such as renegades and skunks as an Italian Fascist called other Italians here in a long letter published a few days ago in an Italian-language newspaper of New York City. This was done because these people publicly declared that they were 100 per cent Americans, and for America, and especially against one of them for having said that if his son was called to duty and had to fight against Italy, he would approve it.

I have observed for a long time that all Italian Fascist propagandists have always made Italo-Americans understand that in time of conflict their mother country should not be fought against. They have always advocated that on foreign policy the Italo-Americans defend and support their motherland, Mussolini and the Italian interests. The Italian Fascist government has worked here very hard and assiduously to indoctrinate the Italians here with distortion of facts and duties.

Most of these people are not conscious of their wrongdoings and do not realize that they are part of the defense for Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin. The United States authorities have long been advised of their existence and danger, but have been skeptical about the damage that could be done. Now, however, they begin to realize that it is a part of the danger that has to be scotched to carry out successfully the plan for national defense.

Il Mondo, an Italian anti-Fascist publication, of New York City, in its last number printed an account of prominent Italo-Americans of New York City and other communities who have made declarations in public meetings condemning Italy's going to war and reaffirming their fidelity to this country's principles and their duties in support of its defense. It also carries an account of a Fascist group meeting in New York on the occasion of the memorial of the death of Italo Balbo, at which meeting an Italian diplomatic representative was also present. The main speaker on this occasion condemned the Italo-Americans who had made the declarations as above mentioned.

The Federal Government as well as the general public is now looking into the activities of the Italian Fascists. As a consequence, the Italian Fascist authorities have advised the Fascist propagandists in this country and poor victims with a false sense of duty to the mother country, to keep quiet, "avoid activities of meetings and public statements of provocative nature," "omit the display of Italian flags during public meetings and picnics, etc." These quotations are from a news article published in The Washington Post of August 12, 1940.

I claim that any person who lives here, especially naturalized aliens, has an obligation to support and defend this country, its institutions and its foreign policies.

One Hour Of Battle

THIS IS a machine age, but it's best for sons to be prepared for all emergencies. This is a machine age, but mothers must consider their daughters' futures. A debutante looks more interesting on the back of a horse than behind the wheel of a car. Horses have no part in mechanized divisions. They are still, however, important when the children's equitation classes have their initial session at an Army post.

Parents, of course, accompany their children. This is a red letter day. Horses in mother's eyes are dangerous beasts. Horse instruction, according to father, is a difficult art. Nothing must happen to their offspring. They are not concerned about the instructor. That very young lieutenant, though, is worried. This isn't military duty. Still—will it be correct to criticize the colonel's daughter, when that commanding officer will make out his efficiency report on the morrow? And still, he hears another colonel whisper: "I remember when I had a class 30 years ago." Perhaps this is military duty!

Mother One introduces the instructor to Susie and explains: "Susie is a born horsewoman. She draws pictures of them and her grandfather was in the Cavalry." The instructor had planned to divide his pupils into advanced and beginner sections. He murmurs the latter word to Susie. Mother glares at him. He shakes his head. Even the best laid plans must sometimes be changed.

Mother Two's daughter has a new riding outfit. English breeches and black hunt coat, though mother has had trouble deciding between boots and jodhpur shoes. Which does the instructor think will be most becoming to Rosie, who is inclined to be a little plump?

Mother Three is wondering if equitation is really a ladylike art. "Be sure," she warns the young lieutenant, "to watch your language around Mary Anne. Horse expressions aren't really nice."

The daughter of Mother Four volunteers to assist the instructor. She won a ribbon—once—in a horse show.

Mother Five wants the instructor to become better acquainted with Junior. She explains: "He never misses a cowboy movie and you should hear him sing 'Home on the Range.'" The instructor hastily looks at the entrance. Junior has the appearance of being a musical bomb that might explode at any moment.

Other mothers and fathers crowd the hall, but it's time for the class to begin. Mount. There's a little trouble. Susie is short. Her horse is tall. Letting down the stirrups doesn't help. She must be lifted into the saddle and the horse persuaded that the strange armful isn't dangerous. It's easy with Susie, but not so easy with the daughter of Mother Two. Rosie still glows with health when she finally rests in the saddle but the young instructor wonders if he'd be able to pass a physical examination at the present moment. Junior tries to leap into the saddle. He does though, unfortunately, his horse has never seen any Western serials and doesn't know that horses never move away at such a time.

It's time to start. The young lieutenant coughs and makes a carefully prepared speech while the parents stand on the sidelines ready to offer their assistance. "Track to the right." And the mothers translate: "He means go this way. He means go that way." The instructor tries to remember what he did mean. So do Susie and her friends. They compromise by going around in circles. Around and around. That doesn't seem to be correct and the horses put their ears back when reins are tugged and sides are kicked at one and the same time. Ride to the center is the next command. Wiping his forehead the instructor attempts to explain the difference between left and right.

Now it's walk, then trot and canter. Junior wants his horse to rear like a cowboy's. He tries a pin and decides this Western stuff is another lost illusion. Walk, trot and canter after that brief mishap. A horse is running away. Stop him. How, when he can't find a brake. It's easier to fall off. Walking and trotting will probably be best. Mary Anne's hair ribbon falls to the ground. So does Mary Anne when she makes a frantic grab. Mother Three loudly announces that the instructor is not an officer or a gentleman when he insists that Mary Anne remount that terrible beast. Then Mother Three decides to rescue her daughter from a madman, when she hears the sentence: "The more you fall, the better you will be able to ride."

Walking is surely safe. Around and around. Billy's horse begins to kick when Billy experiments with his new spurs. The instructor shouts an objection. Father Six interrupts with a complaint. That horse has a dangerous gleam in his eye. He's unfit for a children's riding class. There's nothing for a young lieutenant to do under the circumstances except to change horses. At least, he has an opportunity to look at his watch.

Still it's walking around and around the ring. Where are the jumps, wonders the blue ribbon winner. The instructor knows that a good officer must be tactful. "I don't," he coughs, "believe that the class as a whole, is quite ready for hurdles."

Around and around. "Heels down," calls a father. "Smile," reminds a mother. "Shoulders back like your father." But that starts a brief family argument. "Hold tight." The instructor ventures a remark that good riders never hold onto the saddle. He must be wrong for he hears a voice: "Isn't she a natural horsewoman?" It's Susie's mother, but the agreeing chorus means that other mothers have other horsewomen in mind.

The clock on the wall strikes 10. It's been a long hour. Perhaps horses have no place in modern armies. Only a real soldier, though, can conduct a children's riding class and not meet defeat in that hour of battle. There's confidence in the young lieutenant's face. He has met an enemy—and—but a mother stops him and offers a suggestion. So does a father. The war is not yet at an end.

Sweden's Election

By J. Joesten

Special Correspondence Of The Post

Labor May Win One Party Rule

Uppsala.

AT THE VERY darkest hour through which European democracy has yet passed since it came into being, a genuine, ordinary, normal election is to be held in Sweden—biggest and strongest of the few parliamentary democracies that are still left on this continent. The fact is noteworthy, almost sensational. Quite as sensational indeed as if a League of Nations meeting were to be called tomorrow! There is something unreal, fantastic, spookish about this general election to be held in Sweden on September 15, when the great battle that will decide the fate of Europe for decades or even centuries to come, may be expected to reach its pitch!

Normally, an election may fray the nerves of any population, but in the circumstances it is intended to exert a relaxing, reassuring influence, and it doubtless will. This is why the Swedish government, after thorough ventilation of pros and cons, decided to hold the election on schedule, four years after the last. If the voters are allowed their say as usual, in the midst of the present turmoil—argues Prime Minister Hansson who tipped the scales for the election—they will conclude that things can't be as bad as all that for this country, and return home with firmer hearts and minds.

At that, it has to be noted that the present election is not going to be of a purely perfunctory nature; on the contrary, it is of the greatest political importance. It is true that the Swedish nation today appears singularly united about the dominant issues of the hour: national defense, foreign policy, emergency measures to meet the looming economic crisis. But there remains at stake one crucial issue, upon which the coming election is going to pivot as never before: the question whether the Socialist Democratic Party is to exert unlimited power in this country, by virtue of an absolute majority in both chambers of the Riksdag.

THE GENERAL election of September 15, by which the Second Chamber (Lower House) of the Riksdag is to be renewed, is for the Swedish Labor Party the last step of an uninterrupted advance toward the conquest of absolute power by parliamentary means. Step by step, from election to election, the party has successfully wormed its way toward this goal. Just how near to attaining it the party has already come may be gathered from the following table which shows the present composition of both chambers.

Parties.	First Chamber.	Second Chamber.	Total.
Social-Democrats (Labor Party)	72	115	187
Conservatives	37	44	81
Farmers' Union	24	36	60
People's Party (Liberals)	15	26	41
Communists	1	5	6
Independent Socialists		3	3
Others	1	1	2
Total	150	230	380

In the Lower House, then, the balance between Labor on one side, and all other parties taken together on the other side, has already been even for some years past, since three Independent Socialists rejoined the mother party which had, at the last general elections in 1936, polled 45.9 per cent of all votes cast and won 112 seats in the House. However, in practice the picture has been for many years quite different from what it might appear according to parliamentary arithmetics. For is is obvious that the "other side" of the House could not possibly be molded into any sort of working opposition, ranging as it does from Communists to Conservatives. In fact, Sweden has been governed since 1936 by coalition cabinets which formerly were composed of representatives from the Labor Party and the Farmers' Union alone, but since December last year include all four major parties grouped in a sort of "national government" such as democracies often resort to in moments of grave international tension.

HOWEVER, even though the Swedish Social-Democrats have not hitherto shown too great an eagerness to exert to the full the power which is virtually theirs in Parliament, it cannot be for the bourgeois parties a trifling matter whether they hold their share in administration by virtue of parliamentary strength or simply thanks to the reluctance of the ruling party to assume responsibilities all by itself at a critical hour. Up to now their claim to have a say in government had been principally based upon the fact that their combined strength in the First Chamber (Upper House) still outweighed that of the Labor Party. And since the two chambers wield essentially the same power, the Social-Democrats could not hitherto have ruled all by themselves, even had they wanted to.

Now, the position on the eve of the general election to the Lower House, is this: nothing but a decline in numbers can prevent the Labor Party from gaining, virtually at least, full control in both houses. For the Upper House, hitherto the strongest bastion of the bourgeois parties, is believed sure to fall to Labor, automatically, a few weeks hence. This is a consequence of the system of indirect election by which the First Chamber is renewed—one-eighth of it every year. Its members are not elected by the voters direct, but they are designated by the provincial diets (landsting) and the municipal councils. The last elections to these local parliaments, held in 1938 and 1939, have resulted in further marked gains by the Social Democratic Party.

However, even though the Labor Party should now at last attain its goal—as is generally prognosticated it will—do not expect a tidal wave of socialization in Sweden. The Swedish Labor Party, which is led by exceptionally shrewd and subtle men, knows certainly better than to assume undivided responsibilities, or resort to hazardous measures, at a time like this.

Dummy's Views

GEORGE SPELVIN, American, finds it more and more difficult to understand his oldest son, the one they call Dummy, who has very positive ideas, most of them in conflict with the old man's.

Last night, for example, Dummy said the whole trouble with the world was the greedy rich.

"All they think about," he said, "is their profits and having a good time."

"Well," the old man said, "and what do you think about?"

"Well," the Dummy said, "I don't think about profits because I am not an exploiter, but if you mean I like to tear around a little and lap off a saucer of toddy, why, what of it? After all, I am human, and you don't live but only once."

"How long has it been since you had a job?" the old man asked.

"About a year," the Dummy said, "and that is just the trouble. The dirty rich are so greedy that they won't give you a job, and I am a member of the lost generation without any market for my talents.

"What are your talents," the old man asked.

"Salesman," said the Dummy. "But nobody has any money to spend because the rich aren't putting out, so I can't make a quarter."

"DUMMY," the old man said, "you ought to know that the more goods they sell the more profits they get, so why would they want to close up business and cut off all those wages?"

"But you take my case, for instance," the Dummy said. "If they would pay me a decent salary I would spend the dough for a car and probably get married and even buy a house. As long as they can pay me a good salary I will keep on sending it in, because, paw, you know I am a rough man on a dollar, and the first thing you know we will have prosperity again."

"But you said the whole trouble is that the rich are so crazy about profits," the old man said, "and now you say nobody has any dough to spend, so it is a cinch the rich can't make any profits not selling anything. Why don't you pull yourself together?"

"The rich put their money into tax-exempt bonds," said the Dummy. "Don't you ever listen to the radio? They buy Government bonds and close up their business and live on the fat of the land without paying taxes."

"IF YOU HAD a thousand bucks," the old man asked, "and there was no chance to make any profits on it in some kind of business and you might even lose the thousand bucks, what would you do with the dough? Would you invest it in a business or buy Government bonds and be sure of your money and a little interest?"

"I wouldn't do either one if I had a thousand bucks," the Dummy said. "I would throw a party like I bet you never saw, because, like I said, you only live once and it is here today and gone tomorrow. But I can understand why some common people would buy Government bonds just to play safe, but I am thinking of the rich. They shouldn't be allowed to stick it away in Government bonds."

"Why not?" Mr. Spelvin demanded. "If the Government don't want the rich dough why do they borrow it? Do you ever hear of them refusing to borrow a million bucks from one guy and borrowing a finn from 200,000 little guys, instead?"

"WELL," said the Dummy, "you can argue yourself crazy, but I am telling you the day is coming."

"What day?" the old man demanded.

"The day is coming," the Dummy said, "when the Government will trick those rich bums. The Government will tax the ears off their factories and stocks so they will lend it all to the Government instead. And then the Government will refuse to pay them back and they will be out of luck, and guys like me will all get jobs with the Government, and boy, will we go to town!"

"Out of the mouths of dummies," said George Spelvin, American.

Squeeze Play

By Mark Sullivan

Threat From Without, Danger at Home

IN A WORLD where so many nations are desperately unhappy, many under the heel of the conqueror, it would be almost shameless for America to feel sorry for itself. Yet the fact is America bears a special kind of burden. In the spiritual sense, America bears a special cross.

Fate has maneuvered America into a "squeeze play." (The Greeks had a word for it, "dilemma.")

One side of the squeeze comes from abroad, by invasion—we are threatened by totalitarian government. The threat—so we are told by many—is immediate, and is in the form of invasion by arms. Our Ambassador to France, Mr. William C. Bullitt, says with the authority of the Administration, that we are in as great danger, and the same kind of danger, as France last spring; he says that if the Nazis conquer Britain they will then invade us. President Roosevelt says much the same thing. Others say the invasion will come after an interval. Some say the invasion may be indirect, by way of South America. Practically all agree that even if the Nazis do not at once attack us by arms, they will, by various means, including trade pressures, try to compel us to adopt the totalitarian form of society and government. The pressure would be difficult to resist—with all the rest of the world totalitarian, of either the Nazi type, or the Communist, Fascist or Japanese type.

THAT IS the threat from abroad. That is one side of the "squeeze play."

To resist that, we are asked to arm, and we do. To resist that we are asked to become a strongly centralized government, to give great powers to the President, to surrender individual rights, to accept conscription. To resist the threat from abroad, we are asked to surrender our individualist way of life, and to adopt, for defense, the collectivist way.

To which we say, "Sure, fine—anything to defend us from this totalitarian threat from abroad."

So far, so good. We are all set to resist totalitarian invasion from abroad. We are confident. We are of good spirit.

But, just as we surge forward in the marching spirit of defense against a totalitarian danger from abroad, suddenly we see the other side of the squeeze play in which fate has involved us. Suddenly we are aware there is a totalitarian danger at home, too.

With benumbing dismay, we wonder: If we give these great powers to President Roosevelt, will he and the New Dealers use them only for defense against a foreign invader? And when that need for them is over, will the powers be surrendered? Or would the New Dealers have so maneuvered that it would be difficult or impossible to divest the Presidency of its extraordinary powers?

IF WE GIVE up individualism and adopt collectivism for the temporary emergency of defense, will we ever get our individualist system back? Will we ever be able to shake off collectivism?

We know that many in the New Deal want collectivism, not for the emergency of war, but as the permanent mechanism of national life. They want collectivism for the sake of collectivism. They wanted collectivism, maneuvered toward collectivism, long before the threat of war arose.

We recall that already, more than once, the New Deal has been under suspicion of harboring the wish for, of even planning, a totalitarian type of government for America. These have not been the suspicions of the uninformed, nor the fears of the merely timorous. They have been the fears, almost the charges, of poised and thoughtful persons, sincere and disinterested, speaking upon evidence that seemed to them justifying. As Miss Dorothy Thompson put it, in 1937, about the time of the group of New Deal measures which included change in the Supreme Court:

"These bills are not isolated measures but add up to a consistent picture. And the picture is of a tremendously centralized government, with a power and authority vested in the President, not far from equal to the power and authority vested in Mussolini or in Stalin."

AND AS IT was expressed by Mr. Walter Lippmann, June 26, 1937: "I feel, let us hope mistakenly, that he (President Roosevelt) really does have a plan and that he is determined to execute it. It is not a plan of social reconstruction. It is not a program of social reforms . . . It is a plan, as I see it, to gather together an irresistible power over the economic life of this country and to consolidate that power in the hands of his own following . . . I wish I could recover the belief that the President really is interested in democratic reforms and not in the establishment of irresistible power personally directed. It is not pleasant to have such fears about the Chief Magistrate of the Republic . . . These fears, I regret to say, are shared by men who have occupied high places in this very Administration and in the confidence of Mr. Roosevelt himself."

The plight of America today is that the very Chief Magistrate, about whom those fears were felt, who was feared as harboring the wish for totalitarian authority here at home, is the same Chief Magistrate upon whom now we must rely, as commander in chief, to defend us against totalitarian invasion from abroad.

This is America's dilemma. It is tragic.

Books And Things

Of Men And Women

"TROUBLED WATERS," by Roger Vercel (Random House $2.50), is essentially a masculine story. Women will read it, to be sure, and be held by the pull of its emotional force and the dark conflict of its tale, but the men will get closer to its essential elements. For Vercel, author of "Tides of Mont. St. Michel," tells a bitter story of men swept by tides of the sea and tides of passion. He tells it with power as rugged and cold and merciless as the treacherous waters of the Iceland coast which make the background of his action. No woman enters the scene once the trawler, Vulcan, leaves the shores of France, but it is a woman who controls the destiny of every man aboard.

Capt. Jean Villemeur loved his wife with a consuming passion. During the long absences from home, when he stood on the bridge of his ship, directing the movements of his men, he fed on memories of her charm and beauty, intensifying his desire to get home to her. Loving her as he did, he could not understand why their 18-year-old son, Jean, insisted upon coming with him on this voyage. It was as though a man deliberately chose the depths of hell instead of the gifts of heaven. With subtle touch M. Vercel makes it clear to the reader what demon it is which is driving the youth from his mother, and with equally sure craftsmanship he indicates that Helene Villemeur is not entirely unaware of the cause of her son's seeming stubbornness of purpose.

The spirit of Helene follows the ship through the cold waters of the North. It stands with the captain at his post, at the same time warming and tormenting him: it lives with the son who cannot rid himself of the shameful secret he hides. The days drag for both of them while the business of filling the hold of the ship with codfish goes on. Magnificently M. Vercel recreates the hard and brutal life of the fishermen on the trawler. He writes without sentiment or romantic inflection of the sea and of seamen; this is a way of earning a living, which tries men's hearts and muscles. The well-groomed, kindly captain that Jean had hitherto known at home is turned into a tyrant who drives himself and his men without mercy. Yet he is not hated; rather is he respected for his strength and knowledge of seamanship. All realize that his objective is ultimately the same as theirs—to fill the ship with its precious cargo and to return to France.

It is a report of death that comes over the ship's radio which leaves the vessel a prey to the seas. M. Vercel's description of the disintegration of a strong man who, in his personal loss, forgets his duty to his ship and to his men is an excellent psychological study. And it is part of the grim bitterness of the tale when M. Vercel makes it evident that it is easier for a man to live with the shame of betrayal than with the grief of bereavement.

IN "BRING HOME THE BRIDE" (William Morrow & Son, $2), Gale Wilhelm is similarly concerned with a group made up of father, son and a woman. With the same skeletonized frugality of polished prose which distinguishes all her work, she tells the tragic love story of Hans and Carol. In many ways this book will recall her earlier novel, "No Letters for the Dead."

Hans was 24, Carol 33 when they first met. Each had something hidden in the past which it was important for the other to know, but it was the woman who was the first to assemble the strength and the courage to stand clear of the shadows. That Miss Wilhelm succeeds in making Carol wholly sympathetic to the reader is tribute to her sensitive art. Carol, who becomes Hans' wife, had years before been the mistress of Max, his father. This is the knowledge the young man, hitherto untouched by love, must assimilate without sophistication. This is the knowledge they must both hold in their hearts without shame or bitterness.

Later on, there is still the secret that Hans must share with Carol. She comes upon it unexpectedly and with maturity can take its burden from the man. It is Max, worldly and sophisticated, who eventually destroys their happiness. Driven to action by his son's announcement of his marriage, he flies across the continent to make it clear to Hans that the union is impossible. But instead of Hans it is Carol who assumes the responsibilty of that fateful meeting. It never happens, for catastrophe hits her before she sets eyes on Max.

The Campaign Issue

TO HOLD a national election campaign at what may be the climax of the most decisive battle of modern times is to subject democratic institutions to a tremendous test. To meet that test successfully we shall all have to behave better than we do in an ordinary political campaign; the exaggerated words, the loose charges, the vilification and the bias, that are the usual thing in ordinary campaigns are not pardonable in this campaign. We are conscripting men. We are making the wealth of the people available for the defense of the nation. This is a solemn business. Upon each of us, the candidates, their managers and spokesmen, upon those who report and those who comment, there is a solemn obligation to regard the discussion of this solemn business as a personal trust which he must exercise as calmly, as soberly, as fairly, and as disinterestedly as he can.

If this is not "realistic," then let us realize that none of us has ever lived amidst realities like those which are the realities of this hour. If this is a counsel of perfection, let us remember that we are in the presence of the greatest issues of our epoch, the tragic issues of life and death, of freedom and slavery, and that only as men rise far above their normal selves can they hope to be equal to the issues. The event is so great that all who are capable of understanding it must know that the usual complacency and cynicism, the usual calculation and chicanery of politics, are inadmissible today. A standard of behavior, which in normal times would perhaps be priggish and pedantic, is imposed upon us now by the fact that we have to collect ourselves to face the greatest ordeal of our lives and to deal with the most fateful events in our whole experience.

TO BE CALM and cool and fair and disinterested we must in the first instance retain our perspective. The next President of the United States will be either Franklin D. Roosevelt or Wendell L. Willkie. Whoever wins will have had the votes of a little more but not very much more than half the people. When the election has been held the winner will be President of the whole people. He will need the support of the whole people. The whole people will need to be able to give him their support. That being the case, it is obviously our first duty to make sure that no irreparable division is caused within the people, that no uneradicable suspicions are planted among them, that the campaign shall not end with half the electorate thinking Mr. Roosevelt is a villain and the other half thinking that Mr. Willkie is a villain.

Yet if some of the things that the partisans are already stooping to say are believed, if the good sense of the people is impressed by these irresponsible rhetorical charges, we shall arrive at election day with half the voters sullenly hating the next President of the United States. We cannot afford to have that happen. We cannot afford to take the chance that it might happen, that this time—because of the danger and the fear it engenders—the people might not recover their humor and their sportsmanship when the votes have been counted and the orators, thank heavens, have become silent again.

CERTAIN LINES of argument, which are already being developed by the party strategists, must, therefore, be ruled out by disinterested and public-spirited citizens.

From the Democratic side, no truck can be had with the charge that Mr. Willkie is an "appeaser," in other words that he is prepared to surrender any of the vital interests of his country. Mr. Willkie is not an appeaser and could be driven to become one only if the country were so weakened by internal division that a coherent defense of American interests had become impossible.

No truck can be had with the Democratic argument that Mr. Willkie is an agent of plutocracy out to grind the faces of the poor. He is not, and no good purpose is served by the incitement of class feeling against him.

No truck can be had with the innuendo that he has any conscious or unconscious bias towards Nazism. He has not a trace; on the contrary, he is if anything more peculiarly resistant than most to the Nazi philosophy.

From the Republican side, no truck can be had with the argument that Mr. Roosevelt is conspiring to involve this country in the European war. It would be much truer to say that he has been timid and hesitant, and has done too little and has often done it too late, in taking those positive measures which insulate this country against the consequences of a catastrophe in Europe. In all fairness it must, however, be recognized that he has had to deal with a very unenlightened opposition.

No truck can be had with the Republican argument that Mr. Roosevelt is a dictator or is conspiring to become one. Mr. Roosevelt is no dictator: those who call him a dictator do not know what a dictator is. Nor is he conspiring to become a dictator. There is not one shred of evidence to support the charge.

No truck can be had with the Republican argument that Mr. Roosevelt is seeking subtly to destroy the regime of private property. He is not. He has, no doubt, done many things which were unwise, many things which weaken the self-reliance of the people and the sense of responsibility among local communities. But so did his predecessors when they allowed free enterprise to run wild. Their errors and his errors are important and need to be debated and must be remedied. But they should not be debated as if they were crimes. For they are not crimes.

THESE ARE the malignant issues of the campaign and if they were cut out, and put away as they should be, the real issue of the campaign would emerge and could be considered honestly. The issue is whether Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Willkie is the better able to organize the internal and external security of the United States. There is no other issue. All the other issues are trivial, or they are tricks, dodges, stunts to divert the people.

The real issue is big enough to warrant all the attention we can give it, and complex enough to make any independent voter reflect carefully before he makes up his mind irrevocably.

First Destroyers Given to British

of flags and handshakes, but these registered the same deep emotion of the cry, "The King is dead, long live the King."

The United States sailors did not conceal their feelings at leaving their ships. They would sooner have been taking them into active service themselves, they said. The British crews were triumphant in their obvious joy. As they swung on board their new ships someone started whistling, "There'll Always Be an England," others took it up and it swept the dockside.

It was a British and United States show. Canadian officials took no part and Naval Minister Angus MacDonald confined his participation to an official call on United States Admiral Reichmuth, who will stay on here until the other United States destroyers are transferred.

Have Real Bunks

The sailors carried their blankets aboard rolled up in hammocks. Belo wthey got their first big surprise. For the first time in hundreds of years British tars won't sleep in hammocks. There were bunks with real springs for every one of them.

The ships' stores were complete to the last detail. One huge refrigerator was filled with butter, another with meat; there were potatoes, carrots, cabbages, eggs, sugar, cheese, coffee. The tars got their lunch a few minutes after they took over.

Only personal belongings were taken away by the United States crews. There were supplies of all kinds left for the new tenants except rum rations. The United States destroyers have been officially dry ever since they were built, but the prohibition era ended immediately. This afternoon the British officers served the first legal drinks ever served on board when the United States officers called.

Two Vivacious Starlets In 'Personals' at Keith's

Lucille Ball, Maureen O'Hara Here Friday; Walter Wanger at Variety Club Today; This, That and the Other About the Theater

SO STARS CONTINUE TO FALL on Washington!

There has been quite a parade of them through town of late—with Mickey Rooney still in the not-so-distant offing—and now comes word from Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's, that, come Friday, Maureen O'Hara and Lucille Ball, costarred in the film, will be present for four personal appearances in conjunction with first Washington showings of RKO-Radio's "Dance, Girl, Dance." These soaring young players will fly here from Hollywood to include Washington in a list of approximately 10 Eastern cities in which they will be seen in person.

BELL

You will have little difficulty in identifying Miss O'Hara. It was she who played opposite Charles Laughton, her cinema sponsor, in "Jamaica Inn" and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." More recently she was seen with Adolphe Menjou in "A Bill of Divorcement" in its second time around. Departing widely from the serious roles she depicted in the named pictures, Miss O'Hara assumes the role of a chorus girl in "Dance, Girl, Dance." The picture, needless to say, is a filmusical.

Paradoxical as it may seem, Miss Ball might be a little less easy to "put the finger on" because she has been in so many more films. "Stage Door," "That's Right, You're Wrong"—the Kay Kyser thing—"The Joy of Living," "Having Wonderful Time" and "You Can't Fool Your Wife" are a few of the items in which you may have glimpsed, and been impressed by, the youthful ebullience of Miss Ball.

Anyhow, whether they occupy the forefront of your memory or not, here they come. And what a rousing reception they should get on Fifteenth street, with its penchant for the allurements of talented young womanhood.

If you must know, it will be a personal pleasure to welcome Lucille Ball back to the Capital. As I recall it—and the old memory ain't what it used to be—Lucille was a member of the cast of "Hey-Diddle-Diddle," a short-lived, semi-musical that opened at the Belasco uncounted seasons ago, under the sponsorship of Anne Nichols, whose resources somehow seemed to run out before the piece got very far. During that first Belasco week, however, we had the whole troupe on the air one morning over WOL and my recollection is that Lucille Ball was quickest on the trigger of all who were called upon to participate in a strictly ad lib aerial half-hour. And that cast included Keenan Wynn, son of the illustrious Ed; Alice White and numerous others who had long been around their stage and studio doors.

The Variety Club of Washington, at its first membership luncheon of the season, in the Willard Hotel today at 1, will be addressed by one of the most distinguished speakers it ever has drafted from the motion picture industry. The principal address will be delivered by Walter Wanger, veteran film executive and producer. Mr. Wanger is a cinema preeminent who has the courage of his convictions. His productional activities are actuated less by a desire to follow the easy line of least resistance than by a keen conviction that as one of the most effective mediums of expression known to the modern world, the screen is obligated to take a definite stand in all matters of social, economic, political and international questions of universal concern. His remarks may be expected to be frankly and forcefully expressed, with no "pulling of punches."

Something of Mr. Wanger's attitude toward the duty of the motion picture industry to the public is exemplified in his productions of "Algiers"—a picture that did more for Hedy Lamarr than any in which she subsequently has appeared—and "Blockade," a sterling document that scored more emphatically in the minds of the thinkers than it did at the general box-office. His latest production, not yet seen in Washington, is "Foreign Correspondent." This is a film ostensibly based on Vincent Sheean's "Personal History." Events moved so precipitously in Europe during the making of the picture, however, that it was found impossible to adhere to the Sheean text. So not even the title was retained. Under the direction of Alfred Hitchcock, nevertheless, there is said to have emerged a mystery-melodrama that ranks at the top of the seasons output.

Mr. Wanger may have something to say of all this at the luncheon today.

For the benefit of those who believe that old wine, old cheese and old friends are best, it may be remarked that "Mayerling," that oft-revived picturization of the tragic tale of the Hapsburg archduke and Mme. Maria Vetsera, will be continued for a second week at the Little Theater.

That eminent independent, Mr. Sidney "Boogeyman" Lust, proposes to defy superstition in a big way this week. Are you fearful of walking under a ladder? Does a peregrinating black cat across your path give you the creeps? Is the breaking of a mirror, in your estimation, a sign of imminent doom? If you spill some salt, are you petrified? All of these superstitions have their bases in legends that seemed to mean something centuries ago. Mr. Lust thinks they are the bunk today. So on Friday, the thirteenth, at his Cameo Theater, in Mount Rainier, he is going to put all these eerie auguries to the test. Patrons will be permitted to knock on wood on their way out, just to double-cross the particular jinx for which they hold greatest reverence. To make the thing complete, the chief screen feature for the evening will be Boris Karloff in "The Man With Nine Lives." That might hook up with the "black cat" idea—if your nerves are equal to the strain.

Barn Theaters Begin Season's Closing Week

Roadside's 'East Lynne' And Cross Roads' 'Smilin' Through' Billed

Both of Washington's barn theaters last night began the final weeks of their 1940 seasons. At Roadside Theater on the Rockville pike "East Lynne" is the attraction, while at the Cross Roads Theater in Virginia "Smilin' Through' will bring down its curtain for the summer on Saturday evening.

Roadside's drama, based on Mrs. Henry Wood's enormously successful novel, has for so long been a classic of American—and English—players, that its reappearance is of genuine interest to local playgoers who have not seen the celebrated sorrows of Lady Isabel. Played with elegance and restraint by Roadside's most familiar players, it is enlivened no end in its barn theater production by a bright entr'acte, "My Mother Was a Lady," sung by Bibby Osterwald and the play's three leading men.

"East Lynne" is the name of an English solicitor's home, to which he has brought a young, titled lady as his bride. She is a lovely little bundle, but quite susceptible to gossip. She believes an untruth about her honest husband, chucks respectability for a Parisian lovenest with Sir Francis Levison, a fashionable roue. You know what happened to such a waif in 1861. It happened, every bit, to Lady Isabel.

Directors Work Hard

Betty Gray is the epitome of all Roadside heroines as the unhappy wife and Larry Lawrence is the paragon of masculine virtues as her beset husband. Norman Rose is particularly fine as the villainous Levison, while the rest of the cast includes Lois Alexander, Edna Evans, Ralf Nicholson, Jack Salamanca and Florence Konold. Ralph Fowler directed, as he has for all of Roadside's productions this summer.

Raison d'etre for Cross Roads' revival of the Allan Langdon Martin play of the first World War days is the presence in the Virginia company of Elizabeth Winburn, a young lady in her first season with the group who scored emphatically in "A Woman's a Fool" and "Fallen Angels," summer highspots of the Cross Roads season.

In the dual role which Jane Cowl created a generation ago, Miss Winburn has the toughest load of this locale's summer acting assignments, for "Smilin' Through," while a sure-fire hit for years, is a sentimental tale which demands a top-flight cast of knowing actors. Miss Winburn does a superb job with a convincing brogue, a natural charm and a sure sense of timing. Her associates, not so happily cast, include Robert Langley, William Draper, Austin Gattis, Margaret Mansfield, Julian Hatcher and Irma Gordon.

Like Roadside's Mr. Fowler, Howard Wentworth has directed all of the Cross Roads plays this summer, proving his worth in a variety of works that range from farce to mystery, from sentimental drama to comedy.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Sept. 9

WHEN LAURENCE OLIVIER and Vivien Leigh decided to be married, they arranged the details with great secrecy. Their decision was a last-minute one, and the only persons who shared the secret were the justice of the peace, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Colman and Garson Kanin . . . Neither their secretary nor their servants were aware of the wedding plans and they notified no member of their families . . . They drove to Santa Barbara at night and, after the ceremony, went to an appointed way station, where their cars were switched, to avoid recognition. Then, assured of complete freedom of detection, the newlyweds drove to their honeymoon cottage . . . On the doorstep was a message which just had arrived—a congratulatory cable from London, dispatched 24 hours earlier to arrive at that moment. It expressed best wishes for a long and happy marriage. It was sent by Leigh Holman, Vivien's former husband.

VIVIEN

THE WEDDING PARTY was late in arriving, and the impatient justice of the peace did not know that the couple who had secured a marriage license under the name of Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh Holman were movie stars. But when he saw the couple he recognized them, and beamed . . . "We want a very short ceremony," Olivier directed . . . "Okay," the official agreed. "I'll give you the shortest ceremony you ever saw." He proceeded—but forgot their names. When he finally concluded, he wanted to express some indication of his knowledge that he was marrying two famous members of the motion picture colony. That's why the justice who married Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh concluded the ceremony with: "I now pronounce you man and wife" . . . and then coyly added the singular word: "Bingo!"

OLIVIER EXPECTS to return to England as soon as he has completed his flying course. He now has 88 solo flying hours to his credit. As soon as he has the required 250 hours of training he plans to go to London to join the R. A. F. . . . The secret and unexplained visit he and Miss Leigh made to Canada two months ago concerned arrangements for finding refuge for their respective families—arrangements which now have been completed. Miss Leigh's mother and duaghter are now in Canada. There, too, are Oliver's son and his former wife.

ANOTHER HOLLYWOOD wedding story concerns the marriage of Charles Lederer, the screen writer, and Virginia Welles, former wife of Orson Welles . . . It was a dignified ceremony, complete in every detail. After the groom had placed the ring upon the bride's finger and the parson had made the final pronouncement which made them one forevermore, Lederer turned to his bride, tenderly, and then said to her: "Okay. Now beat it."

FRANCHOT TONE paid $7,500 to the producers of "The Fifth Column" to free him from his contract to tour with that show in the fall . . . Tone also signed a contract to work for Universal Films . . . Hedy LaMarr will have an unusual role in "Madame X," the movie based upon the Spewack play, "Clear All Wires." The play is set in the period of the Russian revolution. Hedy's role will be that of a street car conductor

FRANK FAY, supplied with renewel opportunity when he was signed to play the preacher in "They Knew What They Wanted," waited anxiously at his home for the reports about the sneak previews. Fay's career depends upon his success in that movie, and so he eagerly awaited news about the fan reaction . . . A studio employe finally tabulated the preview reports, which indicated that Fay's performance was well received, and phoned the glad tidings to Frank . . . "Just a minute," was Fay's acknowledgment, "I want to congratulate my mother—on having me."

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 9 (INS).—Bing Crosby's baby brother, Bob Crosby, has to lose 15 pounds in ten days. Now don't all start writing in with diets because he probably has his own for he has wanted this job more than anything else. He's going to be starred with Bonnie Baker in an original, which as yet has no title. You remember Bonnie Baker who made the song "Oh Johnnie" famous? Bob will be featured with his orchestra and Twentieth Century-Fox feel they have another Bing in this young brother of his who will be sure to meet with a great reception if he'll only try and get rid of some of that superfluous weight.

PARSONS

News that RKO has borrowed Jean Rogers for the femme lead in "Malvina Swings It," reminds me that not long ago the little Rogers girl was playing Flash Gordon's girl friend in the Universal serial based on the cartoon strip. Hollywood, which never sees serials, was oblivious to Jean's existence, but kids all over the country knew her as Dale, Flash's lady love. Since then Jean has been put under contract by Twentieth Century-Fox and has graduated to features.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Peter Arno, the spectacular one, is at the Beverly Hills Hotel for three weeks and every eve some femme long-distances him from New York; there is a rumor that the Barrymore split is publicity for "The Great Profile" but I don't believe it; Wendy Barrie's heart-beat is Joe Gray, manager of the Miramar Hotel; Sonja Henie's mother is on her way to New York to visit Sonja and her bridegroom, Dan Topping; the Mary Beth Hughes-Robert Stack romance is hotter than hot. They dined together at Victor Hugo's just before he went to Lake Tahoe. He returns tomorrow and will go to Lake Arrowhead properly chaperoned by his mother, the attractive Betzi Stack; talk is that the William Powells may adopt a baby; the Louis Kings have just taken an 8-week-old girl into their home. The demand for children in Hollywood homes seems to be increasing.

Bob Leonard gave his mother a birthday dinner and an airplane trip (her first) to San Francisco; I call it nice of Joan Davis to coach Susanne Foster in an imitation she is doing of Joan in a Para picture; Buddy Rogers has a date with Twentieth to talk over a picture deal; Bing Crosby notified his family here that he is canceling his South American trip because of weather conditions; Lew Ayres was unable to work in his next "Dr. Kildare" picture on account of a cold sore which ruined his beauty.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Sept. 9.

Metro's search for a young boy to play in "The Yearling" with Spencer Tracy is over. They toured the country, wrote ahead to the Board of Education in various towns: "This is no gag, no publicity tie-up. We're searching for a boy, and want an unknown." Gave his qualifications, and when the talent scout reached the cities, many boys were lined up. They actually interviewed 16,000 and tested over 400. Then narrowed the search down to six and brought the boys, with their mothers, to Hollywood, put them up for a week, while studios made minute tests.

HOPPER

One was chosen. His name is Eugene Eckman. He's 12, comes from Atlanta, Ga. His father used to work for the Western Union. He has a younger brother and sister. They're all living quietly here, and making plans, if things turn out the way they hope, to build their own swimming pool.

It's high time that Ginger Rogers is going back to red hair for "Kitty Foyle." For any girl as pretty as Ginger to wear that disguise of dark hair is just something beyond my ken, because Ginger's always been one of my favorites.

Carole Bruce, of "Louisiana Purchase," is the only gal I know who was offered $2,500 for a screen test, a round trip to Hollywood, and turned it down. Offer was made by David Selznick, who's so crazy to put her in a picture that when they're dining in the Stock Club at separate tables, he puts in a call and talks to her from his table to hers. She made a couple of shorts for Warners before she had her new nose. Now they're going to release them. She'll make her first picture for Universal next June.

I heard Director Mike Curtiz, on the "Santa Fe Trail" set, yell out, "Hey! You! Run those empty horses right through here."

Fred Astaire's sister, Adele, wrote Fred of her husband, Lord Cavendish's experience as member of antiparachute forces in Ireland. Was called out one night to search for parachute troops near his estate. Came in disgusted—had found three young couples making love. No place left in the British Isles any more where a pair of kids can make love in private.

Nelson Leigh, who played the Christ in our Pilgrimage Play, was in his dressing room after a recent performance, (dressing rooms are called "Heaven" for this show) when he received a visit from several people, among them his father, Harry Christie. All were talking when Nelson asked where his dad was. Someone said he must have stepped out, and, looking outside in front of the dressing room, Nelson saw his father sinking to the ground from heart attack—and he died in his arms.

Two Classics You'll Live in This Fall

Proved fashion classics aren't likely to be replaced in American affections, regardless of New York or Parisian style dominance. The inky black suedes (left) are cut along the popular opera pump last, but carry a newly sophisticated accent in the steely beads embroidering the buckle. The autumn brown calf and suede "spectators" (right) are as indispensable to fall woolens as the suedes are to black crepes

A WOMAN'S

WASHINGTON

By JEAN BROWNELL

THE MOST RABID opponent of working wives could not object to one group of money-making married women here. They're the wives of Montgomery County farmers who bring their produce to the Farm Women's Market at 5504 Wisconsin avenue each Wednesday and Saturday. Housewives delight in their fresh vegetables, dairy products and baked goods. And the farm women turn their profits into raised standards of living. "It kept us off relief," says one woman. "We have electricity and water in the house now," says another. A third is entering her son at the University of Maryland this month on the strength of her market earnings.

Blanche Corwin Wilcox, founder and director of the market, became familiar with the farm woman's problems through 11 years' work as Montgomery County home demonstration agent. "The purpose of the extension service," she explains, "is the economic, educational and social advancement of farm people. I feel that very little is done for them economically."

Mrs. Wilcox opened the Wisconsin avenue market in 1932. Such was its success that she established another in Silver Spring the next year. A total of about 60 women now sell produce at the two markets, she says. Average earnings on a good Saturday range from $30 to $50 each.

TALE OF THE TIMES—Reporting for work one morning, a maid told her mistress of a fight she had had the night before with her husband, who stalked out of the house and had not reappeared. The mistress expressed sympathy, but the maid apparently did not require it. "Makes no difference to me," she said. "Gives me a chance to catch up on my running around."

The People's Drug Store at Connecticut avenue and McKinley street provides a bulletin board at its entrance for neighborhood help wanted and lost-and-found ads . . . Featured at the Chevy Chase Pharmacy is a Glamour Sundae: reading from top to bottom, it consists of a cherry, whipped cream, carbonated water, chocolate syrup and vanilla ice cream . . . The Dupont Circle Pharmacy achieves a prewar Parisian air with its "sidewalk cafe" of four tables.

College Trained Man Questions Girl's Suitability To Be His Wife, Since She Lacks Academic Polish, Having Left High School to Support Her Parents

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: This past summer, I vacationed in a distant city, spending much time in the company of a girl whom I had met previously on a Western trip, and with whom I had since been corresponding. The vacation was idyllic and our friendship ripened into a romance.

We had much in common. Our religious faiths, ideals and recreational desires were identical. She is a sincere type of girl, with beauty, brains and breeding. Only two stumbling block existed. One—the fact that she is seven years younger than I. The other—the fact that my formal education greatly exceeds hers. I have had seven years' college training, whereas her studies terminated with high school. There is very slight possibility of continuance, because of her limited funds and responsibility to her parents.

We discussed these obstacles somewhat when we were together. The age angle presented no apparent problem, we agreed, but the question of education was, unfortunately, passed over too lightly at the time. After getting home and thinking it over, and after analyzing the opinions of my parents and a few close friends, I reopened the question—candidly and, I'm afraid, somewhat indelicately—in a letter to her.

Being very intelligent and proud, she was incensed, and replied that my education was largely accidental—which is only partly true. While I had no dependents, I worked all through college and graduate school. She said that love was infinitely more important to happy marriage than formal education. She also made caustic comment about listening to others. Yet, in the main, the tone of her reply was friendly.

I followed it up with other letters, asking for reconsideration and a rational discussion of the question, and also, humbly apologizing for giving unintentional hurt. To these I have had only one answer, categorically stating that, so far as she is concerned, the romance is over and done with.

This leaves me with much to reflect upon, and I need your advice. Do you think there can be a permanently happy union of persons with so much difference in educational background? I have no illusions about the grandeur of college training—well knowing that education is only valuable when properly used. But I have been told—particularly by my college-trained parents—that after youth has gone, such disparity in cultural backgrounds probably would result in unhappiness.

I heartily agree with the girl's pronouncement concerning the basic importance of love; yet I am inclined to believe, with my parents, that cultural discrepancies might provoke a breach, I have been advised, since the matter has been under consideration, that if this girl refuses to discuss the question in a rational way, or if she refuses to cooperate in hurdling the obstacle, then I had better dismiss the whole thing. But she is young, and her lack of maturity probably has some effect upon her stability—a factor I remembered too late.

How should I treat this matter—made doubly complicated by the miles between us and the small possibility of our meeting for a long time? You may say I merely imagine myself to be in love because of my too-practical approach. Yet I am constrained to believe that practicality, in this case, is dictated by caution and a desire to do nothing to jeopardize the happiness of two people.

My intense concern over the matter indicates, I think, that this is something more than a "summer romance" to me. While I am inclined to be philosophical about it, supposing it is something that was "not to be," I am loathe to give up the relationship without a struggle. I feel that what is worth having is worth some effort.

BENEDICT.

Girl Is Superior To Man, Apparently

DEAR BENEDICT: Your patronizing attitude toward the girl's necessitously limited schooling was a stuffed shirt's performance, and she deserves a round of applause for smacking you down. As between the two of you, she appears to be the more intelligent and practical person, the one better taught to make a swift and apt adjustment to a difficult social situation—and that, after all, is one of the primary aims of formal education. It appears to be a lesson which failed to "take" with you—judging from your crude, indecisive, tedious mauling of a delicate question.

Which brings us to the debate over your respective and allegedly disparate "cultural" backgrounds. Culture, in the sense that you mean it here, has to do with "enlightenment and refinement of taste acquired by intellectual and esthetic training." One does not, because one cannot, weigh and measure the quality and range of another's so-called "culture," by the simple process of scanning his academic advantages. Proof of the existence of personality "culture" can be supplied only in conduct.

And, incidentally, one doesn't have to spend long years in advanced-study classes to acquire either intellectual or esthetic training, any more than one has to take daily workouts in a School of Gymnastics to keep one's body superbly exercised. A highly intelligent mind, as well as a splendidly vital body, take naturally to tone-building activities, finding the wherewithal in every circumstance and situation.

Somewhere along the line, or, it may be, from her blood stream, your quondam sweetheart evidently acquired an intrinsic "culture" that stands on its own feet, without need of academic documentation, and that compares favorably with the brand which animates you and your cautious counselors. When put under the clan lorgnette she gave the fledgling aristocrat's young, hot retort to a middle-class snub, by smartly challenging your viewpoint and thereafter permanently dismissing the discussion, and you along with it.

What she did proves her mettle and her high-born spirit's measure. It was an intuitive reaction—instinctively wise and right—and keyed to the full implications of your smugly condescending, second thought inquiry into her "cultural" suitability to be your wife. It tells that she has no desire to be patronized and tolerated by the likes of you, simply because life has denied her certain advantages it has afforded you.

From close association, you knew her actual social worth and grace. You had found her remarkably congenial, in mind and spirit, and as a social companion, despite her youth and disadvantages. All this should have been proof enough that she could keep pace with you; and if you must entertain doubts, they should have been directed at your ability to keep pace with her, once she had access to the presumably larger opportunities you could give her as your wife. I imagine it was her shocked realization of your fundamental smallness which prompted her to renounce the romance. No doubt she aspires to grow and keep on growing, and for that reason feels the need of a larger-gauged life partner than yourself.

Your completely self-centered approach to the problem leads me to think the girl is well rid of you; that you couldn't make her happy if you tried; and that you yourself would be happier, in the long run, with a girl who can be to you what your college-trained mother has been to your college-trained father—i. e., his self-satisfied prototype. In other words, I don't feel justified in helping you to try to win her against her better judgment.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Formula for a Stuffed Shirt

(Mrs. Aurelia Puffer-Swagg, noted authority on "front," who is substituting in this column for Mrs. Henrietta De Goofey, now on vacation, presents today the last of her series of catechisms, "How To Be A Feminine Stuffed Shirt.")

Q. What is the first thing for the novice stuffed shirt to remember?

A. That she must have a very definite opinion on every subject and never, never change it.

Q. What opinion should she have?

A. The one generally held by Pillars of the Community.

Q. But suppose someone challenges her opinion?

A. No one will ever challenge it.

Q. Why not?

A. Because she always delivers it with an air of finality, as if she were handing down a dictum.

Q. What should be the attitude of the would-be stuffed shirt toward all persons who disagree with her?

A. That they are radicals, agitators, fanatics or theorists, also crack-brained and un-American.

Q. What is the most fatal error the amateur stuffed shirt can commit?

A. Making a clever remark or exhibiting a sense of humor.

Q. But how can she avoid laughing at the jokes of others?

A. By never listening attentively to what others are saying.

Q. What should be her attitude toward strangers?

A. She should be very aloof and suspicious—especially if they are newcomers.

Q. How should the neophyte stuffed shirt behave at a social event?

A. She should wear a dead-pan face and recognize no one to whom she has not been introduced at least 17 times.

Q. What should her conversation consist of?

A. Remarks on the weather, the beauty of the table decorations, the charm of the antiques, and the deliciousness of the refreshments. She may also occasionally take a conversational stand for the Right in discussing politics, economics or religion.

Q. When a strange woman's name is mentioned, what should she remark?

A. She should ask immediately, "WHO was she?"

Q. What are her standby expressions in discussing people?

A. Her favorite terms are: "Good connections," "family background," "nobodies," "upstarts," "a little ordinary," "a very good woman, but——"

Q. What other expressions should she cultivate in her vocabulary?

A. She should repeatedly use: "worthwhile," "sound thinker," "dignified publicity," "constructive advice," "highly improper," "genteel," "representative woman," "liberty but not license," "fundamentals," "duty," "good form," "definitely, yes," "definitely, no," "conservative," "good," "subversive influences," "right stand," "right action," "right thinking," etc.

Q. What are the pass words into the Stuffed Shirt set?

A. "Our crowd," "our set," "our world," etc.

Q. In her social relations, what should the stuffed shirt always remember?

A. To be acutely class-conscious.

Q. How may she do this?

A. By being snooty to underlings and fawning on those above her in the social scale. Also by bewailing the fate of her friends who marry out of their "class."

Q. What should be her chief aim conversationally?

A. Never to say the unexpected and to be as big a bore as possible.

Q. What is the Ultimate Reward of the stuffed shirt?

A. To live a very dull life and to be regarded by the public as much more important than she really is.

Next Week—Mrs. DeGoofey will resume her reforms.

Diplomacy With Diplomats

Oh, Jane, do come back to earth! A diplomat isn't a god—he's still a human being behind his formal manners. What if you did fumble around in addressing the Minister and Ambassador? It was your first time to meet anybody in that social group. And the meeting was quite a surprise to you. The first time meeting you, they (the Minister and Ambassador) probably won't remember you at all, much less your awkward hesitation.

However, if you expect to do any hobnobbing with the Diplomatic Corps in the future, it might not be such a bad idea for you to master a little of their formalities of address. After all, you are too smart a girl not to learn a few simple methods of doing it right.

If you are speaking to an Ambassador, you say either "Your Excellency" or "Mr. Ambassador." His wife (if he has one) is "Mrs. Blank," not "Mrs. Ambassadoress" (except on very special occasions, by courtesy). You introduce the Ambassador by saying "The American Ambassador" or "The French Ambassador."

When speaking to a Minister Plenipotentiary of any country, you usually say "Mr. Blank," or whatever his name is. Sometimes you call him "His Excellency," for courtesy, though this title does not belong to him. In French you always say "Monsieur le Ministre. You also can introduce him as "Mr. Blank." The American Minister," or simply the American Minister. You are supposed to know his name or find it out.

Norwegian Princess May Winter Here

Chances Are She Will Take Apartment And Send Her Children to D. C. Schools; At Present Family Is on Cape Cod

By Hope Ridings Miller

WASHINGTONIANS WHO had hoped H. R. H. Crown Princess Martha of Norway would be coming to our town soon, will have to wait a while longer. She will spend the next three weeks at Osterville, Cape Cod, and may return to New York for another stay before coming to the Capital some time in October—if at all.

HOPE RIDINGS MILLER

Accompanied by her son and two daughters, Prince Harald, and Princesses Ragnhild and Astrid, and the Norwegian Minister, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, she went to the Massachusetts resort by motor yesterday. Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Minister, has been at Osterville all summer, with the exception of a couple of days in New York just after Princess Martha arrived.

Just where Her Royal Highness will spend the winter has not yet been decided. Reports have made the rounds that she was thinking of taking a place in Virginia, but that seems to be off the books now. There have been rumors, too, that she will look over Cape Cod with an eye to buying a place there. Anyway, chances are she will take an apartment in Washington for the winter and put her children in school here.

The Norwegian Minister is expected to be back in town on Thursday, Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne and their children will stay on at Osterville for the remainder of the month.

SPEAKING OF THE NORWEGIANS reminds me—when Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, United States Minister to Norway, is feted by the Women's National Press Club today, a number of distinguished guests, including Mrs. Cordell Hull, will be on hand to hear what she has to say. Her talk will be very much off-the-record, however, just as it was three years ago when she came home on a visit and was a honor guest at the club.

Presiding at a press luncheon for the first time will be the club's new president, Mrs. J. Fred Essary, who recently returned from a trip to Mexico. Incidentally, Mrs. Essary was honor guest at a small welcome-home luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. Irene Caldwell. Sharing honors with her was Mrs. William A. Morgan, who accompanied her to Mexico. Others at the informal party included Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Elliott Thurston, Mrs. Albert Warner, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Bulkley Griffin and Mrs. Basil Manly.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, who spent most of the summer at Watch Hill and Newport, R. I., has returned to Merrywood, her Virginia home . . . Mrs. Robert R. Hitt and William F. R. Hitt are back at their home, 1501 New Hampshire avenue, after spending some time in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. . . . Registered recently at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York were Capt. Pierre Benech, Naval Attache of the French Embassy, and Mme. Benech. Capt. Benech has returned to Washington, but Mme. Benech and their children are in Marion, Mass., where they will be until Friday . . . When the Grace liner, Santa Lucia, glided into pier at New York yesterday after a trip to South America, several persons widely known in Washington walked down the gangplank. In the group were Dr. Charles V. Akin, Assistant Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and Mrs. Akin, who came directly on to their home here; and Albert Norweb and Jeanne Norweb, son and daughter of the United States Ambassador to Peru, Henry Norweb.

WITH THE BOMBING of London taking over headlines recently, many social notables have been launching plans in America for benefit fetes to raise funds for British relief. Lady Lindsay and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt are on the list of distinguished patrons for the benefit dinner and skating party at the opening of the Rockefeller Plaza Roller Rink in New York tomorrow night. Proceeds will augment the fund needed to equip 10,000 hospital beds for England.

Also on tomorrow's calendar is the formal luncheon opening at the swanky Le Coq Rouge, New York, to be held for the benefit of the Bundles for Britain, Inc., headed by Mrs. Wales Latham. Then, too, there's the organization's benefit ball, planned for the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on November 6. The British Ambassador, the Marquess of Lothian, is patron and Mrs. Latham is general chairman.

Off to South America

She is going along for the ride. He is on a big U. S. business jaunt. They are Mr. and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, of Washington, who sailed recently on the Moore-McCormack liner, Uruguay, for an extended trip to South America. Mr. Pierson is president of the Export-Import Bank

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

AN AMERICAN BED certainly feels good to Mrs. Robert Grosjean, who has just returned to this country after a dash over France in the course of which she spent many a night sleeping in garages.

DUDLEY HARMON

With her Belgian husband, the daughter of Joseph Davies sailed for Europe last spring. Mr. Grosjean planned to enlist in his country's army, but halfway across the ocean they received word of King Leopold's surrender.

Landing at Genoa, they were handed a note sent by Mrs. Grosjean senior, saying that she and her married daughter had fled to a peasant's cottage in Southern France. So the young Grosjeans made their way there, grateful for a family reunion even though their refuge had neither electricity or running water.

BORROWING A CAR, and "begging, buying or stealing gas," the couple arrived at Poitiers, where Mrs. Grosjean reported to his refugee government. They told him that if France fell, as seemed likely, there would be nothing he could do. So later, using gasoline which they had buried in the garden for fear the Germans were coming, the little family reached Lisbon.

They embarked on the Excalibur, landing in New York late last week. The young Grosjeans are staying at the Davies' house on Foxhall road. Mr. Grosjean doesn't yet know if he will work for Georges Theunis, Belgian statesman who has been in this country for a year, or if he will go back into business. Mrs. Grosjean, sr., who is an American, came back with them, but her husband remains in Belgium. There he heads the Red Cross, with his main job the repatriation of 2,000,000 Belgian refugees.

EMLEN GROSJEAN reports that you can't get any canned food in France these days, as it is being hoarded for the winter. There is no butter either, but enough fresh vegetables and fruit for the moment. However, she predicts famine for Europe this winter.

Besides having a Belgian husband, Mrs. Grosjean has numerous English relatives. One of them, a cousin, was killed in the Battle of Flanders.

LADY MALCOLM has declined with grateful thanks the offer of the town of Langtry, Tex., to shelter her and her family for the rest of the war. The daughter of the late Lily Langtry, and mother of Angus Malcolm of the British Embassy here, Lady Malcolm cabled that she is too occupied with war work in London to think of leaving the country. But at least she doesn't have to worry about her small grandchildren, who have been shipped to relatives in Canada.

HOW LANGTRY, a little town near the Rio Grande, happened to be christened after the Edwardian beauty is a romantic story. The late Justice Bean, who named it, conceived a great passion for Mrs. Langtry without ever having met her. He plastered the walls of his house with her pictures and the two corresponded for years. But he died without ever coming face to face with his idol.

SEVERAL YEARS LATER, when Mrs. Langtry was touring the United States in her special train, she decided to visit the little town. She wasn't deterred by the fact that Langtry is off the beaten track and meant a detour of several hundred miles. Arriving, she was given a bang-up welcome by "the boys" and presented with a brace of pistols and a carful of livestock.

In offering Lady Malcolm refuge, the citizens of Langtry said "The Justice would have wanted it that way." Lady Malcolm, who inherited her mother's charm and beauty, visited Washington for several months a year or so ago.

Stockmans To Make Home In New Haven

Bride Is Descended From Gov. Carroll And Bishop Claggett

After a wedding trip through the North, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Douglas Stockman, who were married August 31 at the Transfiguration Church, will make their home in New Haven, Conn., where the bridegroom has been assigned by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mrs. Stockman, who was Miss Rebecca Gibson Martin, is a direct descendent of Bishop Claggett, First Episcopal Bishop of Maryland, and of Thomas King Carroll, one-time Governor of Maryland.

The bride, who was given away by her father, Dr. F. J. Martin, wore a gown of angel blue marquisette fashioned over a yoke of the same material, with a tight-fitted bodice and long illusion sleeves bound in at the wrists. Her ensemble was completed by a large blue picture hat and a bouquet of pink roses, blue delphinium and forget-me-nots.

Mrs. Andrea M. Propes, sister of the bride and the matron of honor, was dressed in chartreuse marquisette and carried talisman roses which were repeated in her tulle headdress. Donald W. Seiler served his brother-in-law as best man.

A reception immediately following the ceremony was held at the bride's home. The bride's mother received, wearing a navy blue crepe dress with matching accessories and a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Stockman, mother of the bridegroom, chose a beige costume with white accessories which matched her gardenia corsage.

Mrs. C. Jett Cunningham, of Hedgesville, W. Va., was matron of honor, while Miss Virginia Sowers was maid of honor. Yates Taylor, of Washington, was best man, and C. Jett Cunningham served as usher. Wedding luncheon followed the noon ceremony, and shortly afterward the couple left on their wedding trip. Mrs. Grobauer attended Mary Washington College.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE SOCIETY will open its season with a testimonial luncheon Sunday, September 29, at the Carlton Hotel, honoring Senator Hiram W. Johnson, who was elected by a landslide in the August primaries, Republicans, Democrats and Progressives uniting for him. California has given this kind of support to Senator Johnson since 1917, making him sixth in rank in the Senate.

Mrs. Dorothy B. Harper, chairman of social activities, has called a committee meeting for Saturday, September 14, at 11 o'clock, at the Carlton, when details will be arranged. Attending the committee meeting will be the wives of the members of Congress from California, as well as members of the social activities committee.

All Californians in Washington are invited to make reservations for the luncheon, either through the hotel or Mrs. Walter Clifford Burke at the Westchester.

THE JUNIOR ALLIANCE is looking forward to having first-hand information this season in its study of international relations.

The chairman of this committee in the club is Mrs. Martha L. Williams, who recently sailed for the Orient to spend a year. The members are expecting to hear from her during the season, and her letters will form the basis of some of their discussions of affairs in the Far East.

Mrs. Williams, who holds her master's degree in education from Columbia University, will make a special study of child welfare and education as it is carried on despite the chaotic conditions in China. She plans to make a prolonged stay in Shanghai.

PRACTICAL PRESIDENT—Mrs. Merton E. Twogood, who is president of the Animal Rescue League, is always on the lookout for animals that need a helping hand.

The other day she was downtown on a shopping tour and, at the corner of Fourteenth and F streets, saw a bewildered little dog looking frantically for its owner. She watched him to see whether anyone was nearby to whom he belonged, but no one was. Two other women also were concerned about the little fellow, but told Mrs. Twogood they were visitors in Washington, staying at a hotel, and had no way to keep the dog if they took him with them.

She told them about the Animal Rescue League, called a taxi, took the dog under her arm and delivered him safely at the door of the league. There he is, waiting to be claimed by his owner or to be adopted by someone else who wants an affectionate and appreciative pet.

SIGNING 'EM UP—The Woman's National Democratic Club is sending out "Roosevelt Certificates" with announcements of its campaign meetings, opening tonight at the clubhouse. Members are asked to sell the certificates at a minimum of a dollar each by the end of October. The plan is for every member to sell ten. They bear pictures of Roosevelt and Jefferson and are inscribed "Continue Recovery — Re-Elect Roosevelt" and "Don't Change Horses in the Middle of the Stream."

Mrs. Pauline B. Werth, of Alexandria, is chairman of the committee in charge, and Mrs. Hortense Russell Casey is cochairman in Washington.

A note at the bottom explains that "no one whose position is affected by the Hatch Act is being asked to participate in the plan."

Mrs. David Tucker Brown is president of the club and Mrs. Arthur Condon chairman of the club's campaign committee.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, who has just returned from her post as United States Minister to Norway; Malcolm McConihe and Russell Balderson will speak at the opening campaign meeting tonight.

WALK WARILY

Suggestions from an Overworked Guardian Angel

"NO LOITERING". Cross streets quickly and with certainty. Don't make the driver guess what you are going to do—he may guess wrong! Books, papers and conversation can wait till you're safely across. Traffic inattention means hospital detention.

Contract Bridge

Even experts take flyers, as witness today's hand. The bidding would seem to be more typical of the last hand of the last rubber of a strenuous and lengthy money bridge game than of an important match in a national championship.

Charlie Lochridge and Myron Fuchs, who is one of the country's finest money players, met up with a little defensive bidding by young Tobias Stone, admirer of Jacoby, and his partner, Jesse Slutt. Even the senior experts were a little giddy, for Lochridge opened the bidding with six hearts. Jesse Slutt, we firmly believe, was shocked into doubling, for anyone can see he hasn't a double, either business or takeout. Fuch's redouble is sensible enough, but young Stone's six no-trump invention is sheer balderdash. The rest follows with dreadful inevitability.

East won only four tricks in the play, three spades and the ace of clubs, to go down nine for a loss of 1,700 points, which just about spells defeat for any troupe in a team-of-four championship where total points are counted.

Parochial and State Schools Reopen Doors

PAROCHIAL schools in Washington and public schools in nearby Maryland and Virginia swung wide their doors yesterday to upward of 70,000 pupils.

In Washington, more than 25 parochial schools registered an estimated 15,000 youngsters. Catholic pupils in the Southeast section of the District attended first classes in the new St. Francis Xavier school on Pennsylvaniia avenue.

The St. Francis Xavier school is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur. The building was dedicated this summer.

Pupils in the Maryland counties of Prince Georges and Montgomery knuckled down to classroom work yesterday, while in Arlington County, Va., pupils were registered. Classes will start today in all the schools except Washington and Lee, where there are both junior and high school students. Classes at Washington and Lee will start tomorrow.

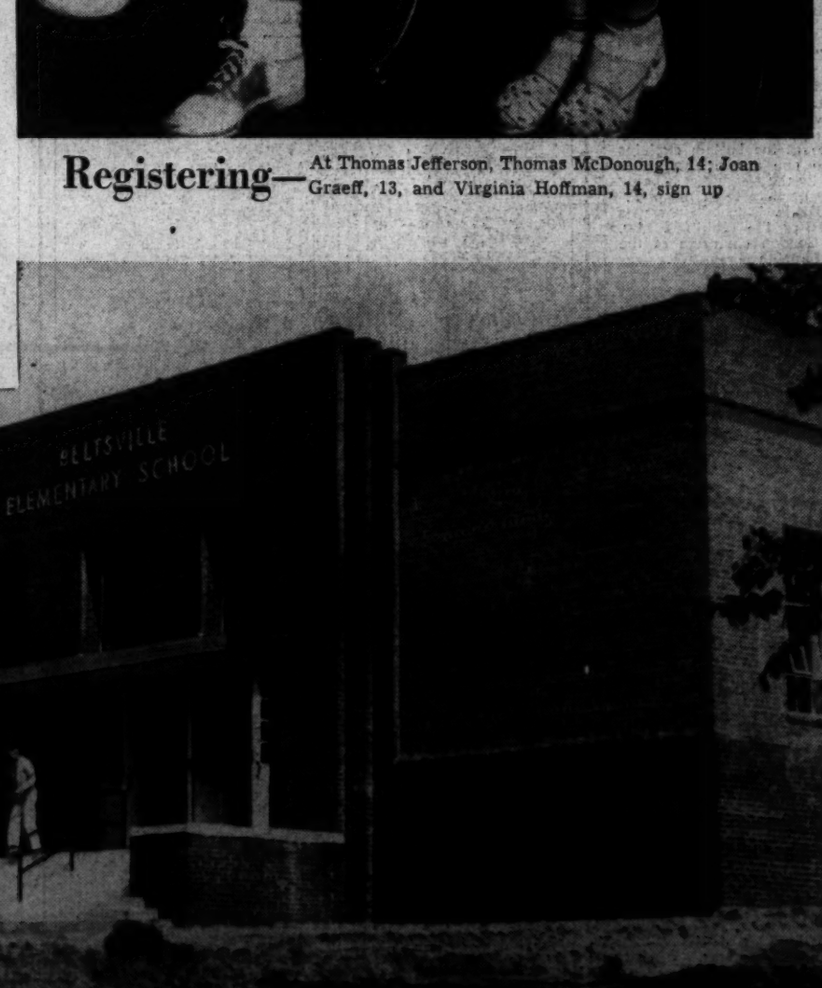
PRINCE GEORGES County Superintendent Nicholas Orem estimated total enrollment at 17,000. In Montgomery County, Superintendent Edwin Broome said enrollment was expected to reach 16,000. Arlington County Superintendent Fletcher Kemp estimate an enrollment of 9,000.

Schools opened last week in Alexandria, Va., with an estimated enrollment of 5,500 and in Fairfax County, Va., where the enrollment is expected to exceed 8,000.

School officials in all the suburban areas said indications were that enrollment would be considerably higher than last year. There were numerous reports of overcrowded classrooms.

At Rockville, in Montgomery County, where the high school was destroyed by fire last spring, arrangements were made to accomodate pupils in other schools. Pupils in the eleventh and twelfth grades were transferred to the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School and other pupils were sent to Kensington. Some were accomodated in the Rockville school annex, which escaped the flames.

In Virginia—Katherine Embrey, 13, and Margaret Williams, 14, ready for classes at Thomas Jefferson High School



Registering—At Thomas Jefferson, Thomas McDonough, 14; Joan Graeff, 13, and Virginia Hoffman, 14, sign up

In Maryland—Teacher Antoinette McKeever explains to kindergarten and first-grade youngsters what's in store for them this year at the Parkside Elementary School, Silver Spring

At Beltsville—The new elementary school building was opened for registration, but no classes will be held until furniture can be moved from the old structure. Everything is expected to be in readiness by the end of this week

Manor Park Group Visits Coolidge High

Citizens' Association To Seek Increase In Bus Service

Community curiosity about the interior of the new $1,450,000 Calvin Coolidge High School was enthusiastically satisfied last night, as Manor Park Citizens Association became the first group to tour the building.

Parents trooped through classrooms and paused at intervals to try out the desks which their children will begin using on the opening day of the session, September 23.

Thomas J. Holmes, principal, who led the tour, told the visitors to "toss aside all rumors" that the equipment wouldn't be sufficient for the opening on scheduled time.

100 Make Tour

"We'll have 750 youngsters here at 9 a. m., September 23 and we'll put them to work," he said.

Among approximately 100 persons on the tour were more than a dozen pupils who couldn't wait until the opening day to sample their new school. Jack Harvey, 15, of 911 Concord avenue northwest, who plays a clarinet and saxophone, was particularly interested in the large music rooms with ceilings treated for sound-proofing. Adele Reese, 16 began metnally adding courses in home economics to her schedule when she saw the model apartment —complete with living room, bedroom, kitchen and laundry.

In the 65-room building near the corner of Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest, the visitors proudly viewed the large auditorium to seat 1,072; the armory, gymnasium, cafeteria to seat 546; library, numerous shops and science laboratories.

More Buses Sought

The citizens association, holding its first meeting of the fall, adopted a resolution asking the Public Utilities Commission to require the Capital Transit Co. to furnish additional buses over the J-1 Thirteenth street route to their community. The resolution stated that service now is inadequate and that respacing of buses would not meet the demand.

Another resolution, which was adopted, asked the PUC and the director of motor vehicles and traffic to "take such necessary action" to eliminate traffic hazards which, it was said, was caused by buses making lefthand turns from Thirteenth street northwest into H and other streets in the downtown area. The resolution stated that buses which are destined to areas west of Thirteenth street northwest properly should be routed over streets and highways other than Thirteenth street in the lower part of the city.

George A. Corbin, chairman of the association's public utilities committee, proposed both resolutions.

West End

West End Citizens Association last night urged extension of the two-hour parking zone along H, I and K streets northwest, to Twenty-second street. The unit also urged the Capital Transit Co. to route more of its street cars around Washington Circle rather than send them to Potomac Park.

The association was entertained with a movie on American Airlines, "Flagships of the Air." Two new members were elected, Otto Jorg and George Papanicholas.

Metropolis View

Vincent B. Boudren was nominated last night for the presidency of the Metropolis View Citizens Association as the organization resumed activities with a meeting in Crosby-Noyes School.

He and other officers will be elected at next month's meeting. Also nominated were B. R. Margerum, for vice president; Mrs. J. E. Montgomery, for treasurer, and Mrs. W. M. Flinchum and Mrs. Frank Wickers, for secretary.

A. J. Driscoll, member of the Board of Public Welfare, told the meeting of welfare activities in the District. The association voted indorsement of the District government reorganization bill, passed yesterday by the House.

City-Wide Use Of 'One-Man' Trolleys Seen

P. U. C. Hears Capital Transit's Plan to Alter 15 Old-Type Cars Now

The first move to establish a city-wide system of one-man streetcar operatoins was made by the Capital Transit Co. yesterday at hearings before the Public Utilities Commission.

The company applied for permission to convert 15 old "conventional" type cars to one-man operation. President E. D. Merrill, however, explained that the company plans "100 per cent one-man service"—with the exception of the Rosslyn-Benning line—by 1945.

Previously, the P. U. C. has refused to sanction conversion of two-man streetcars to one-man operation.

No Layoffs, Is Promise

Yesterday's testimony was devoted principally to safety and efficiency features oft he proposed conversion plan. Merrill promised that no employe would be laid off under the program and the "same standard of service to the public" would be maintained.

The P. U. C. was told that if the application to convert 15 cars this year is approved the company plans to request permission to expand its one-man system by converting 35 cars a year through 1945.

Riley E. Elgin, P. U. C. chairman, ruled, however, that current hearings would be confined to testimony on the 15-car application and plans forthe long-range program must wait.

Company employes were represented at the hearing by T. Ormonde Nichols, counsel for the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes, Local 689.

From H. L. Musson, acting assistant superintendent of transportation for the Capital Transit Co., Nichols drew the admission that one man would be required to do the work of two under the conversion program.

Musson insisted, however, that one-man operation of street cars was safe and in most instances more efficient.

John B. Ecker, research engineer for the company, testified to operating schedules of one-man cars, explaining that loading and unloading and actual running time will remain unchanged under the proposed conversion plan.

Referring to the P. U. C. refusal to grant previous conversion application of the company, Frank J. Coleman, secretary of the Central Labor Union, told the commission:

"It is our hope that you will perpetuate this rule, because we believe that the old type street car is not adapted for one-man operation, and as such is a menace to both operators and the traveling public."

Coleman added that the Central Labor Union has not opposed the new President's Conference type of cars because "they are equipped for safe operation by one man."

Both Musson and Ecker testified that necessary changes in the old-type cars to make them practical for one-man operation would include all safety features.

The hearings will continue today.

Four Cars Collide On Connecticut Avenue

A four-car crash briefly tied up traffic in the 3100 block of Connecticut avenue last night. It all happened, according to police, when an auto driven by Raymond S. Betz, 33, of 4222 Thirty-seventh street northwest, ran into another, which ran into a third, which ran into a fourth. No one was hurt.

Capital News In Brief

Va. Man Tried Today For Cluett Robbery

Clinton Hume Johnson, 28-year-old Richmond, Va., man, will go on trial in District Court today on charges of robbing Representative Harold Cluett, of New York, after a Willkie Republican banquet at the Willard Hotel July 8.

Cluett was robbed, bound and gagged in his hotel room by a man with whom he had sat during the banquet. The bandit, representing himself as a Republican from Virginia, accompanied Cluett to his room on the pretext that it was near his own.

Detective Sergt. E. E. Thompson went to Richmond yesterday and recovered from a pawn shop the Congressman's $100 watch, which had been pawned for $10, and his $35 chain, pawned for $4.65.

Vaccine Clinics Open for Children

Special smallpox vaccination clinics for school children have been established at New Jersey avenue and D streets northwest, Health Officer George Ruhland announced yesterday.

The clinics will be open from 9 a. m. to 12 noon on Saturdays, September 14, 21 and 28, he said. He reminded parents that vaccination against smallpox is required by law for all children entering school.

Police Seek Identity Of Amnesia Victim

Police yesterday were attempting to learn the identity of a 50-year-old amnesia victim.

The man walked into the Detective Bureau and told police he found himself in a District park three weeks ago, his wallet and all means of identification missing. He could not remember whether he had suffered a stroke or had been slugged. He said that he had walked to Herndon and had been held by Fairfax County police until yesterday, when released.

At Gallinger Hospital the amnesiac was described as having "educated" speech, gray hair, rimless glassses, oxford gray suit, tan shoes and tan panama hat.

Final Pleas Heard in Lake License Case

Liquor Control Board Decision Expected By End of This Week

A decision by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in connection with the liquor license of James J. (Jimmy) Lake is expected by the end of the week. Final arguments in the case were heard yesterday.

Demanding the board revoke Lake's license, Assistant Corporation Counsel Michael Keane described the Gayety Theater manager as a "likeable fellow with an infectious personality," but charged he was negligent in the operation of his Ninth street night club.

"The fact that he has allowed solicitation by prostitutes, whether or not he knew of such activities, is sufficient to warrant revocation of his license," Keane declared. "If this isn't a case of revocation," Keane added, "we may as well strike out that section of the law which prohibits liquor establishments to be used for immoral purposes."

In behalf of Lake, Attorney James A. O'Shea contended there was no basis for revocation of the license "because there hasn't been a single violation or arrest in his establishment and he has never failed to cooperate with the police."

Good faith and an honest effort to obey the law is all that is required of a license holder, Shea said, "and Mr. Lake certainly has made every honest effort to keep his place in good order."

The revocation hearing was prompted by a recent pandering charge involving a girl in Lake's club.

Last Rites Today For L. P. Higgins, Iron Works Head

Final rites will be today for Laurence P. Higgins, 60, District iron works operator, who died Saturday at Garfield Hospital. Requiem mass will be held at 9 a. m. in St. Anthony's Church, Twelfth and Monroe streets northeast, with burial to follow in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

A native of New London, Conn., Mr. Higgins came to Washington as a young man. In 1919, on his father's death he became head of the L. P. Higgins Iron Works. He made his home at 1212 Hamlin street northeast, was a member of the Elks Club, and active at St. Anthony's Church.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Helen Tracy Higgins; two sons, William T. and Laurence William, and two brothers, William E. and Maj. Hugh Higgins, all of Washington.

One Dead, Four Hurt In D. C. Traffic

Fatality Total For Year Hits 49 As Pedestrian Dies

The District's forty-ninth traffic victim for the year succumbed in Casualty Hospital last night as four other persons were struck and injured by automobiles, one critically.

William B. Betters, 25, colored, of 5509 Jay street northeast died late last night of injuries suffered last Saturday when he was hit by an auto as he crossed at Florida avenue and Eckington place northwest.

Following Betters' death, police held the driver, Charles P. Smith, nue and Eckington place northeast, for action of the coroner. Earlier in the day, Smith was arraigned in Police Court, charged with leaving the scene of an accident and failure to possess an operator's permit. He was held on $600 bond after pleading not guilty.

Child Critically Hurt

Betters' death was the forty-ninth here as against 60 over the same period last year.

Two-year-old Bert Akins, colored, of 1009 Twenty-fourth street northwest, was critically hurt last night when felled by an auto in front of his home. He was taken to Children's Hospital with both thighs fractured and internal injuries. Police listed the driver as Goldie M. Kirkpatrick, of 1010 Twenty-fifth street northwest.

Elsie M. Edwards, 50, of 1009 Eleventh street northwest, crossing the street near her home, was knocked down by an auto, and was taken to Emergency Hospital with injuries to the head, hip and knee. Police charged Edward Young, 22, colored, of 4326 Hays street northeast, with reckless driving. Young told police he struck the woman in an attempt to avoid hitting a child on a bicycle, and that he lost control of car, running it into a tree.

Also charged with reckless driving was Edward P. Wroth, 51, of Warren, Pa., whose auto, police said, ran into 8-year-old Hattie T. Crawford, of 5524 Eighth street northwest. The accident occurred in the 800 block Longfellow street northwest. The child was treated by a doctor for head and leg injuries.

At Rhode Island avenue and Mills street northeast, a 47-year-old woman was hit by a truck. The woman, taken to Sibley Hospital, is Mary C. Carper, of 439 Luray street northwest. The driver, police said, was Stewart Roundtree, 33, of Arlington.

Grocer Is Robbed Of $270 by Pair At His Garage

William Gildenhorn, proprietor of a market, was robbed of a wallet containing $270 yesterday by two colored men who blocked the door of his garage with their automobile and held him up with a sawed-off shotgun.

Gildenhorn closed up his store, the Upshur Market, 4131 Third street northwest, after paying a $486 bill and took the rest of his receipts, amounting to $270, to his home at 1817 Kilbourne place northwest.

As he started out of the garage the thugs drove up. One, masked with a dirty white handkerchief, jumped out while the driver, wearing smoked glasses, covered Gildenhorn with the shotgun. Yelling for help while his wallet was being taken, Gildenhorn held to the masked man until the driver jumped out and forced him to turn loose.

Last Rites Today For Miss Stover, Native of D. C.

Funeral services for Miss Cora May Stover, 86, a native of Washington and well known in musical circles here, will be at 3 p. m. today at Oak Hill Chapel, with burial in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Miss Stover died Sunday at Emergency Hospital after a brief illness. A daughter of Solomon Stover, a leading Washington coal merchant, she was educated at Georgetown Visitation Convent and spent most of her life here and in Rockville, Md.

She was widely traveled, however, having been abroad seven times. An amateur pianist, she was a close follower of Washington musical events. Her residence at the time of her death was the Bancroft Hotel, 1627 Nineteenth street northwest, but for many years she had maintained homes in Georgetown and Rockville.

40-YEAR-OLD FIRE ENGINE ROLLS AGAIN—With the pounding of hoofs and the clang, clang of a bell, this steam-pump fire engine clattered up to the front door of The Post yesterday. It wasn't to put out a fire, however, for comely Kathryn Leonarda, a wisp of a girl, was at the reins. Beside her sat Capt. Casey Suit, a fireman for 26 years, who saw the old apparatus in action before it was put out of service in 1922. They wanted to put out the announcement: You'll see us roll once again at the Field Day Saturday at Griffith Stadium, for the benefit of the Police and Firemen's Relief Fund. Doughboy, Lindbergh and Al replaced the famed Barney, Jean and Tom in the harness

Fifty-five Gain Adjustments Of Police Traffic Tickets

Eight persons with diplomatic connections and two Congressmen who used their good offices to arrange traffic ticket adjustments for friends were among 55 whose names appeared on Maj. Ernest Brown's "Traffic Primer" last week, according to the list made public yesterday.

The 55, which is a comparatively low number of "fixings" for a week, included 42 tickets that were adjusted with a warning and 13 that were canceled outright.

Representative Jack Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, arranged a warning for Chleo B. Spencer, 2511 Q street northwest, charged with neglecting to deposit coin in a parking meter, according to the report. The adjustment was marked with a warning.

A similar pardon was arranged for Samuel A. Kell, 1814 G street northwest, charged with obstructing a crosswalk, thanks to the intervention of Representative Graham A. Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina.

The fact that a house on the site has been torn down does not alter the regulation against parking within 20 feet of the corner one person learned after giving that excuse for the violation. She was June C. Dollar, 3228 Hiatt place northwest, who was let off with a warning.

A youth who said he was a student from Mexico, Leon B. Moory, 1338 Thirteenth street northwest, was pardoned for parking in such a manner as to obstruct a fire escape.

Those claiming diplomatic immunity were Gertrude E. Oehlman, German Embassy; Francisco Guares, 3000 Massachusetts avenue northwest; Lupe V. Alfaro, Mexican Embassy; Ivan I. Philipenko, 1630 R street northwest; Phillip Mudd, 911 Butternut street northwest; Fernondo de Medeios, 3007 Whitehaven street northwest; Robert Eggert, German Embassy, and Juan B. Davila, Mexican Embassy.

Hairdressers Join in Fight On Patent

The croquignole style of hairdressing is an ancient art, members of the Washington Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association, Inc., claimed last night at a meeting at the Mayflower Hotel.

With its national association, the group is fighting a patent claimed by the Philad Co. on the croquignole method. The general method of croquignole waving is winding the hair from root to tip around spools, it was explained.

Officers of the organization asserted that the firm holds no patent on method, but only on the method as it works on the machine it sells. Members present said they were taxed $12 a year by the company in addition to paying the cost of the hairwaving machine.

The croquignole method of hairwaving is the most popular style with Washington women, it was said.

White Sox Knock Indians Out of League Lead

Maurice McCarthy Leads Amateur Qualifying

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, Sept. 9.—Tomorrow afternoon the Yankees will look the Cleveland Indians in the eye and then it will be known if the Cleveland club is worthy of the pennant they've been threatening to win. Not since 1922 when the Yankees edged out the St. Louis Browns by a half game has the American League witnessed such a frenzied September finish.

POVICH

If Mr. Will Harridge, president of the league, had written the script himself, he could have designed no more sensational a stretch rush then is now occupying his league. It has all the perfect ingredients of high suspense: (1) a back-sliding league leader torn with internal strife (Cleveland); (2) a team of stretch-running fiends who have untracked themselves from a season long slump (New York), and (3) the game plodder which shows no sign of quitting (Detroit).

For two of the teams—Cleveland and the Yankees—tomorrow may be the fateful day. The Yanks are moving here for a two-game series and what is the Cleveland club going to do about it? It is an intriguing question in the light of a seemingly positive tendency on the part of the Indians to chuck it when the going gets tough. Six defeats in their last eight games at a time when they might have won the pennant by merely marking time—that is, breaking even—has aroused gnawing doubts of the Indians' ability to win when the chips are down.

Of the Yankees' clutch ability there is not the shred of a doubt. None except a Yankee team, grounded in the fighting traditions of Yankee clubs, could have zoomed out of the second division into a contending position for the pennant in a six-week surge. The Indians may have misgivings as the two crucial games with the Yankees approach, but if we know the Yankees, they are grateful for this all-important test.

If the Indians have a spark of courage—and they may have it—they should welcome this head-to-head test with the Yankees. For 20 long years, even since Cleveland won its last pennant, Cleveland teams have been operating under a cloud. It is proverbial that Cleveland teams may be depended upon to fold when the traffic gets tough. This is the opportunity for the Indians of 1940 to lay that reputation completely.

A Cleveland pennant triumph this year would be spectacular. The Indians weren't rated as pennant contenders but they went out and played winning ball and grabbed the league lead in mid-season. They have played their best ball since flirting with destruction invited by their squabbles with Manager Oscar Vitt. They have had the slump that comes to all Cleveland teams, and can they weather it? If they do, their pennant triumph would be the greatest feat in American League history.

It may be the Indians' misfortune that one of the clubs which is challenging them so stubbornly is the Yankees. In these crucial series, the Yanks have a way with them. It is when the chips are down that the Yanks are in there leveling at their very best. They are not the ones, either, to overlook any advantage. In this series the Indians may catch it not only competitively but vocally.

There aren't any sharper tongues in baseball than the Yankees and in the peculiar position of the Cleveland club they have much to work with. The dugout chatter is apt to set a new high mark what with the Yankees having the Crybaby A. C. to operate on. Coach Art Fletcher, the cleverest word-jockey in baseball, will constantly remind the Indians of their awful sins, or he will suddenly have reformed.

The clash of the Indians and the Yankees brings together two teams which are strangely alike in many respects. They both have sensational infield defenses; they both can bring to bear powerful pitching, and there are no complaints about their outfields, defensively. Neither team can hit much, this year. The result of their crucial series is very apt to revovle about the courage each club brings into play.

The series starting tomorrow may provide powerful testimony of the exact part which managerial direction plays in big league ball games, among other things. It is no longer any secret that the Indians are operating on their own, that they are ignoring Manager Oscar Vitt and taking the game into their own hands. The Yanks, on the other hand, are ruled with an iron hand by Manager Joe McCarthy. Can a fighting, squabbling gang of ball players best a well-directed harmonious club? And if they do, what will it prove? An old baseball tradition will probably go by the boards.

Over in Detroit, the Tigers are still a club to be reckoned with. Beating the Indians may not be sufficient for the Yankees to win the pennant. They still must beat the Tigers. The Yanks move into Detroit after the Cleveland series. There they will encounter a team that has never lacked for, shall we say, guts. The fact is, the Yankee-Cleveland series may be only a preclimax in the pennant race. That's one of the things that are making it so intriguing.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Sept. 9.—Any thought that Bing Crosby has entered the National Amateur Golf Championship at Winged Boot for the sake of publicity is as ridiculous as a suggestion that J. P. Morgan lead the conga line at a New York night club in the hopes of getting his name in the Broadway columns.

CONSIDINE

Harry Lillis Crosby, called Bing, is completely serious about his golf. He's in there because he's one of the best amateurs in the country, as well as one of golf's truly incurable fans. At Hollywood's Lakeside Country Club he is often on the course or practice tee at 6:30 a. m., getting in some knocks before going to work. He puts up the $5,000 prize list and picks up the tab for all the rest of the expenses for the annual Open tournament which bears his name. Bing is one of the few honorary members of the P. G. A.

He is a consistent low-70 shooter, but has been down in the late 60's more than once. Playing with Henry McLemore, he once shot the final nine holes of the Lakeside course in 33, and the layout is frequently used for tournaments.

Crosby isn't a long hitter, but he's straight and a better than average putter. He has made a real study of the pasture land evil. Whenever he is missing on the set of one of his pictures they usually find him off in some corner, showing a stagehand how to cure his slice.

Long ago he established his claim as the worst dressed golfer. He may even stand out in this department in the amateur, though from the looks of some of the simon-pures we've seen he'll be sorely tested. The pro golfers are the best dressers in sport. Crosby goes around the Lakeside course in trousers that were rejected by the Salvation Army, a faded blue shirt and a battered hat with a feathered lei for a hatband. He plays with anybody who comes along at Lakeside, though his favorite partner is a big red-faced caddy-master named Murphy. The Hollywood rubber-neck busses park on the road that runs parallel with the second fairway at Lakeside, and the barkers bawl out his name and point him out, along with other stars who play past.

Crosby must be the richest and most versatile competitor in major competitive sports. His income is supposed to run more than half a million a year.

With Lin Howard, son of Charles S. Howard, Crosby owns a pretty good racing stable, composed in the main of South American horses. His best was Ligarotti, which ran Seabiscuit to a nose finish in a match race a couple of years ago. He owns most of the stock in the Del Mar Track and will be one of the owners of a new San Francisco track. He had a piece of Freddie Steele, the former middleweight champ, owns part of the Hollywood Ball Club, backs a girls softball team and is about to promote a Madison Square Garden for Los Angeles. He and Buddy Fogelsen, the young Texas sportsman who did more than anyone in this country to raise dough for the Finns, control the new photo chart device for recording race horse finishes. He is also a good ball player. Played at Gonzaga.

He sings, too.

Thornton Lee Hurls Four-Hit Ball in Beating Indians, 2-1; Tigers Now in First

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Sept. 9.—Thornton Lee southpawed the Cleveland Indians out of first place today, passing out only four hits as the Chicago White Sox slammed a 2 to 1 victory down upon the slump-ridden Tribesmen.

The idle Detroit Tigers thus took over first place by a half game and the fast-climbing New York Yankees, who open a two-game series here tomorrow, face the Indians only a half-game behind.

Lee exerted his mastery over the Indians and their starter, Southpaw Harry Eisenstat, before 78,000 empty and 2,500 occupied seats in Cleveland's Lakefront Stadium.

It was the unhappy Indians' seventh defeat in eight starts.

The game wasn't even as close as the score indicates. The Sox, who won only five of their previous 21 starts against the Tribe this year, made 11 hits off Eisenstat and his ninth-inning successor, Joe Dobson.

Score In Fourth

Three of the blows came in the fourth inning, when the Chicagoans scored their first run.

With one out, Joe Kuhel singled past Eisenstat to centerfield. Julius Solters, who takes great delight in beating his old teammates, also singled sharply to rightfield, Kuhel stopping at second.

A slight drizzle started to fall, adding to the gloom which hung over the stadium all afternoon.

Luke Appling smacked a sharp drive toward first base and Oscar Grimes, subbing for the injured Hal Trosky, bobbled it. The blow went for a single and clogged the sacks although Second Baseman Ray Mack, just behind Grimes, probably could have handled it for an out. At that point Eisenstat lost his control and walked Taft Wright on four straight pitches to force in the first run.

Hurler Gets Out of Jam

The bases still were jammed, but the former Tiger hurler got out of that hole by coaxing Mike Tresh to ground to third. Ken Keltner threw to the plate, forcing Solters. Bob Kennedy swung at the third strike for the final out.

In the seventh the Sox scored again by a less elaborate route. Jimmy Webb, another whom the Indians released last year, doubled down the leftfield line with one out and Mike Kreevich plated him with a lazy single just over second base.

That gave Lee a two-run lead, all the tall southpaw needed to take his third win in seven decisions.

Newark Fielder Called Up by Yanks Replacing Henrich

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 9.—Outfielder Tommy Henrich, New York Yankees' outfielder, injured his knee so badly in Boston last Friday that physicians advised the club today he would be lost for the season.

To bolster the Yanks for the stretch drive in the tight American League race, the club today recalled outfielder Mike Chartak from the Newark (International League) farm.

Henrich is in a hospital here and Dr. Robert Emmett Walsh, the Yanks' Club physician, advised complete rest for the leg for several weeks.

The outfielder tore a ligament in the left knee when he overran second base. It was the same knee on which he was operated several seasons ago for removal of a cartilege, and which he injured slightly some two months ago.

Chartak is a left-handed hitter and had a trial with the Yanks last spring. He also is an occasional first baseman and thus will provide additional protection in the event of an injury to Babe Dahlgren.

Betty Jameson, Miss Miley Are Co-Medalists

Pair Tie for Golf Honors in Western Amateur Tournament

By the Associated Press

Seattle, Sept. 9.—National Champion Betty Jameson, of San Antonio, Tex., and Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., twice Western Women's champion, tied with 1 over par 77's for medalist honors in the Women's Western Amateur Golf tournament at the Seattle Golf Club today.

JAMESON

They just nosed out Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, who had a 39, 39—78 despite a freakish second nine card which included three birdies and an eagle.

A brisk north wind kept the field from any par-shattering display and the thickly wooded areas of the course attracted many a wind-blown effort. Miss Jameson's 35 on the first nine, two under par, was the best exhibition of the day, although Miss Traung's par 39 second nine saw her under par on four of the holes but a 6 and a 7 ran up her score.

Betty Jameson, San Antonio, 35, 42—77.

Marion Miley, Lexington, 38, 39—77.

Beatrice Barrett, Minneapolis, 39, 42—81.

Jeanne Cline, Bloomington, Ill., 39, 42—81.

Ellamae Williams, Chicago, 41, 41—82.

Georgia Tainter, Fargo, N. Dak., 40, 43—83.

Mrs. Lillian Zech, Chicago, 38, 45—83.

Mary Agnes Wall, Menominee, Mich., 43, 42—85.

Jane Goodsill, St. Paul, 42, 45—87.

McNeill Upsets Riggs In National Net Play

Don Rallies to Win U. S. Title at Forest Hills; Alice Marble Takes Third Straight Women's Crown

By Henry McLemore
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 9.—From chump to champ in 2 hours and 15 minutes.

That was the feat accomplished by Don McNeill today when he won the National Tennis Singles Championship of the United States with a heart-stopping 4—6, 6—8, 6—3, 6—3, 7—5 victory over Defending Champion Bobby Riggs.

Hopelessly outplayed and outsmarted in the first two sets, and with every spectator in the crowd of 10,000 expecting his challenge to be thwarted in record time, the Oklahoma City boy came roaring from the ruck to give the tournament one of the most stirring finishes in history.

Gave Fans Thrill

McNeill's last minute charge saved the day for the paying customers, because in the women's final Alice Marble swept to her third consecutive championship with a dreary, uninspiring 6—2, 6—3 triumph over the faded veteran, Helen Jacobs. It was Miss Jacobs' seventh, and perhaps last, appearance in the final round. She ogered little or no opposition and Miss Marble disposed of her in 42 drab minutes.

The battle between McNeill and Riggs started slowly, but it swiftly mounted in tension and excitement. When the fifth and final set started the hush that falls over sports crowds only when they are too excited to yell, descended on Forest Hills. The tension reached a peak in the twelfth game when Riggs, trailing, 5—6, started to serve.

Bumped Into Net

On the first point, in putting away a lob for a winner, Riggs touched the net with his body. At least, that is what Umpire Ben Dwight said he did in awarding the point to Mc-

News From A. L. Pennant Front

What will happen at Cleveland today when the onrushing Yankees meet the Indians in the start of a crucial two-game series?

Shirley Povich, The Post's staff baseball writer, will be on the scene in the vast Cleveland Municipal Stadium when the Yankees and Indians clash, to report the newest developments in the feverish American League pennant race.

Povich's daily column, "This Morning," will also deal with the hectic baseball situation in Cleveland where the backsliding Indians have been quarreling with their manager and slumping out of the lead.

Fans Applaud Skinker's Great Shot

Washingtonian's Recovery From Trap Climaxes 76 Round

A Staff Correspondent

Mamaroneck, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Earle Skinker drew a round of applause for a great shot that climaxed his comeback 76 here today in the National Amateur qualifying rounds, a last shot out of a trap near the eighteenth green that thrilled several hundred home-hole spectators.

SKINKER

Buried in a deep trap in front of the green, the Columbia Club youngster in his own apparent nervous, jittery fashion, looked the shot over for several minutes and had the caddy raise the pin so he could see it from his buried position. He went down in the trap, out of sight of the fans, and in a few seconds a ball floated out of the sand and nearly dropped in the cup for a birdie three. It was spectacular ending to a round that, excepting two holes, was as fine as any played here at Winged Foot today.

Earle Sinks 10-Footer

Ordinarily you'd think a starting seven would distract a 19-year-old youngster in his amateur debut. But not Skinker. After his nearly unplayable lie on the fourth with three more led to a seven, he went over again onthe fourth with three more putts. And after a birdie on the sixth his drive hit a tree and led to a six on the par 4 eighth.

But Earle dropped a 10-footer on the ninth for a birdie and an

Suspension Of Abrams Stirs N.B.A.

By the Associated Press

Milwaukee, Sept. 9.—The National Boxing Association, in two-day convention here, today dispatched telegrams to the California and Pennsylvania boxing commissions urging them to join the N. B. A. "in order to more effectively combat monopoly and make boxing a truly national sport."

Ohio threatened to withdraw from the N. B. A. unless the convention enforce its suspension of George Abrams, Washington middleweight, who is scheduled to meet Henry Chmielewski, Polish champion, in a ten-round bout here tonight.

Abrams' suspension, the convention decided, is to take effect after tonight's bout.

Chimielewski won a close decision over Abrams. Chimielewski weighed 160¼ and Abrams 160.

Abrams suffered a cut over the left eye in the fifth round but slugged it out with the Polish champion until the final bell.

A battle was shaping up over the N. B. A. presidency. Sam Murbarger, of Indianapolis, now first vice president, is in line for post on the customary promotion system, but supporters of Abe Greene, of Jersey City, and Joe Triner, of Chicago, were putting on strong campaigns for their men.

Bogart, Skinker Have 75 and 76, Respectively; Bing Crosby Is Attraction

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
A Staff Correspondent

Mamaroneck, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Another of Georgetown University's golfing grads made the national spotlight here today as Maurice J. McCarthy, jr., 38-year-old mining engineer from Cincinnati and 1928 intercollegiate champion from the Hilltop, led the first day's qualifying scores in the National Amateur Championship at Winged Foot.

McCARTHY

McCarthy, who played in a majority of the tournaments in the Nation's Capital during his college days, stroked the par 36 back nine in 33 strokes and added to an outgoing 37 to be the only 70 shooter of the starting field of 146. His late afternoon score crowded three others out of the medal picture; socialite Dick Chapman, former French amateur champ; Johnny Cree, captain of the Duke golf team last year and son of the famous Yankee outfielder "Birdie" Cree, and Thomas Whiteway, 26-year-old Cleveland city champ. They were all tied with 71s.

While the 6,915-yard course yielded only four subpar scores, a majority of the better players were grouped around the middle 70s and right in there with the big named stars were two kid companions from Washington, Ralph Bogart, the 20-year-old city champ from Congressional, and his running mate, Earle Skinker, Columbia's 20-year-old schoolboy titlist.

Bogart Has Eagle

A perfectly played eagle three on the par five sixteenth was Bogart's biggest asset as he turned in a 38—37—75. Skinker, making his national debut, started with a rocky seven on the par four first and took six on the par four eighth but nothing seemed to upset the youngster and he played the last seven holes in two under par for a 40—36—76.

Billy Shea, third of the District's young qualifiers, posted a disappointing 42—41—83.

Of the six Middle Atlantic amateurs who qualified at Chevy Chase, Virginia State Champion Sam Bates, of Virginia Beach, was lowest with a fine 73, just one over par. Otto Greiner, Baltimore's best bet in some years, was in good position with a 76, while Jimmy Watts, of Lynchburg, Va., virtually limited himself with an 80.

His name is not in the first 100 scorers, but the gallery attraction here today was Bing Crosby, who autographed himself an 83 before a gallery of more than 1,000 fans, including Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis. Professionals Jimmy Thomson, Craig Wood, Johnny Farrell, Horton Smith and Harold McSpaden, and Jockey Sonny Workman.

Bing Is Busy

Bing was called on to autograph scorecards and everything imaginable after every shot, and the result was he had little time for golf shots. He kept the gallery in good humor with crooning wisecracks and the galleryites deserted Bud Ward and the others for their movie and radio idol.

Ward, the defending champion and favorite from Seattle, incidentally matched par and his locker number with a 72, coming back in 34 after he was out in 38. Ward was hitting his shots well but took 33 putts for the round, not a championship number. He was one of

Redskins Play Stars Tonight; Turner and Justice Injured

Back Suffers Dislocated Vertebrae

Justice Is Hurt In Scrimmage; 25,000 Expected For Game Tonight

By Al Hailey

A Staff Correspondent

Boston, Mass., Sept. 9.—The injury jinx gave the Redskins another kick in the teeth today as they rushed through a final drill in the rain before taking on the Eastern College Stars tomorrow night at Fenway Park.

Jay Turner, veteran blocking back and former George Washington University star, has a dislocated vertebrae. In the afternoon drill Ed Justice, another blocking back, received a badly bruised right foot when Ernie Pinckert stepped on it in a running play.

Turner was to have his back worked on by local specialists late this afternoon. Justice's ankle was treated and taped up. While both injuries are considered minor in nature, they may keep both boys out of tomorrow's game and definitely will slow the two up if they do see action.

Expect 25,000 Fans

A crowd of 25,000 was the optimistic forecast for tomorrow's spectacle in the Redskins old home town despite the rainy outlook. The game is a charity affair sponsored by the American Legion, who are planning an elaborate "floor show" topped by Connie Boswell, well-known night club and radio singer.

The All-Stars will be minus the services of six of the boys who were in the line-up of the squad which defeated the Champion New York Giants last week, 16-7. Among the missing is Bob Nowaskey, George Washington's standout end of last year, who has joined the Chicago Bears.

Marvin Darmohray, Georgetown's fullback star of last year, is expected to start, however, with the Stars, and Rocco Pirro, fullback from Catholic University, also may see action.

Nelson to Coach Stars

Tuss McLaughry, Brown coach, has handed over the coaching duties to Swede Nelson, former line coach at Harvard. Nelson will be in command of the squad of 25. Vito Ananis, Boston College running star, has been named captain, and the six vacancies in the roster have been filled with players from other New England colleges. Thus tomorrow night, the Redskins will be facing a gang of little-publicized lads who are in their with the determination to show up the pros.

Coach Ray Flaherty plans to start Ed Justice and Sammy Baugh at halfbacks, Ernie Pinckert at quarter and Max Krause at fullback. Krause, favoring an injured back, was running better this morning but still plans to have a thorough examination on the return to Washington. Tomorrow's game will be the last exhibition contest before the regular National League season opens September 15, against the Brooklyn Dodgers.

Two more men will be cut from the squad, now consisting of 35, after the game here. National League rules set the player limit at 33.

Nats Leave On Season's Last Trip West

Rookies Not to Play Against Tigers, Cleveland Indians

Special Dispatch to The Post

En Route West With the Nats, Sept. 9.—The Washington club's last swing around the circuit will be devoid of any experiments with rookies when the Nats are meeting the league-leading Tigers or the second-place Indians.

"We won't be pulling any punches when we meet the leading clubs," said Manager Bucky Harris tonight. "In Cleveland and Detroit, we'll keep our rookies on the bench. At St. Louis and Chicago, where it won't have any effect on the outcome of the pennant race, we'll play our young talent.

"It wouldn't be fair to the other first division clubs if we experimented with rookies against any of the leading teams. If they beat us, they'll have to beat the best we've got."

The first leg of the Nats' swing will carry them into Chicago, where they meet the White Sox in a three-game series. Thence they travel to St. Louis for three games, and then they will become something of a factor in the pennant race. They will meet the Tigers and Indians three times each on the final days of the trip.

Four of the Nats' rookies will see action when the team is meeting the Browns and the White Sox. On the trip Harris took, besides all his veterans, Pitcher Arnold Anderson, called up from Springfield; Jim Mallory, outfielder from North Carolina U., and Catcher Dick Hahn and Infielder Sherrard Robertson, from Charlotte.

Harris yesterday dismissed two rookies for the remainder of the season. They are Second Baseman Morris Aderholt, from Springfield, and Second Baseman Larry Womack, from the Florida State League. They will report to the Nats' training camp next spring.

Anderson and Mallory are the rookies who most intrigue the Nats' bosses. They liked the way the big red-necked right-hander shut out the Athletics for four innings on Sunday before he was beaten. They liked his fast ball. Mallory's "action" both at bat and in the outfield was impressive.

With their chances of finishing higher than sixth now practically nil, the Nats' immediate objective on the Western trip will be to clinch sixth place. The seventh-place Browns are challenging from only two games in the rear.

Sidney Hudson, with 15 victories already to his credit, has set his goal at 18 victories this season and hopes to achieve it in three starts in the West.

Pennant Races At a Glance:

By the Associated Press

The Cleveland Indians slipped quietly out the back way yesterday (Monday) and left the Detroit Tigers in possession of the American League lead by half a game.

While all the other teams in the junior circuit were idle, the Chicago White Sox stifled the Indians 2-1 on four-hit pitching by Lefty Thornton Lee. It was Cleveland's seventh setback in eight games and forced the club out of first place for the first time since August 11.

This development set the stage for a two-game series between the Indians and New York Yankees starting today in Cleveland to be followed by a three-day series between the Yanks and Tigers in Detroit. Out of these games may come this season's pennant winner.

There was only one game in the National League also yesterday, the New York Giants beating the Brooklyn Dodgers, 7-4, and pushing them another half game from the idle Cincinnati Reds.

The standings:

Don McNeill Rallies to Win

TENNIS, from Page 16.

Neill. The hush was broken as the Riggs rooters whistled and catcalled and the McNeill backers applauded. When quiet came, and Riggs put the ball in play with service, McNeill, with a gesture worthy of a champion, proved he didn't care to win a questionable point and tossed the next point away with a deliberate smash to the back stop.

Then McNeill came to match and championship point for the first time—only to fall on his face chasing a sideline shot and give Riggs a reprieve, but the next time he came to within a point of the big silver cup, Don laid into a forehand with all the power in his body and the ball spun over the net to twist the racquet from the hands of the net-charging Riggs and force him into error.

Immense Ovation

As the ball dropped into the net the crowd came to its feet and gave the courageous Westerner a salute he'll remember long after the championship cup has lost its glitter.

The first set of the match saw Riggs give McNeill a fine lesson in how to play tennis.

The second set produced an even more unhappy McNeill. Playing at his peak, and with winners cascading off his racquet, Riggs swept to a 5-1 lead. However, McNeill beat off two points in the seventh game and went on to sweep five straight games for a 6-5 lead. But Riggs breezed through the next three games with the loss of but four points.

Fans Still Doubtful

Even when Riggs won the third set no one thought of him as an eventual winner.

But in the fourth set with games at 3-all, McNeill, hitting superbly now, tore off three games in a row to draw level with his tormentor.

McNeill and Riggs were both at their peaks in the final set. Gone was McNeill's backhand weakness. Gone was the softness from Riggs' strokes. They both went all out, and games followed service until the seventh game when Riggs broke through Don's dynamite delivery to take a 4—3 lead. But McNeill came right back, and with a brace of superb passing shots which nicked the sidelines, broke Bobby's service to level at 4-all.

Don then held this service to go 5—4, but in the ninth game Riggs, when only three points from losing his title, brought off two sparkling placements and a whip-lash service ace to square. Riggs twice was within a point of breaking McNeill in the eleventh game, but the Oklahoma fighter met the challenge with shots that could not be returned and forged ahead, 6—5.

Then came that twelfth game—and a new champion.

Local Colleges Hard at Work With Football

G. W. Latest to Work Out; Others Have Been Drilling

While George Washington University gridmen were inconspicuously undergoing their first practice session of the season yesterday on the Polo Field, the three other members of the local "Big Four" were finally getting in the groove after a week or more of workouts.

Missing—but expected to turn up shortly—from the first Colonial drill were Backs Tom Grady and Harry Ledford, End Johnny Picco and Tackle Tony Barauskas, but otherwise the squad was intact. A total of 30 candidates was on hand for the first morning and afternoon sessions directed by Coach Bill Reinhart and his newly appointed line coach, Gene Shields.

Another member of the coaching staff, former Colonial, Ray Hanken, is en route from his home in Peoria, Ill. Conditioning will continue through Wednesday, after which blocking and light contact work will be gradually worked into the program.

Smith Returns to Maryland

Out at College Park all were rejoicing when Bob Smith, last year's center, showed up for practice. That brought the squad working under Coaches Jack Faber, Al Heagy and Al Woods to 44 players, the total anticipated for the season.

Smith, it was revealed, will be shifted to a blocking-back position, along with Milt Lumsden and "Punchy" Weidinger. Into his pivot spot will be thrown either Frank Blazek, a converted tackle, or John Cordyack, a converted backfield man.

Stiff scrimmages with Catholic University's eleven have been arranged for the Terps tomorrow and Saturday, each to take place at College Park at 3 p. m.

To Use 2 Backfields

At Georgetown the latest decision of Coach Jack Hagerty was to build up a pair of backfields which could be alternated at will. Forced to string along last year, when they were recording their second straight undefeated season, with a mere seven ball luggers, the Hoyas now have available 14 high-powered backs and consequently should be able to switch without too much damage to the line-up.

Last year's starting backfield, of course, will be preferred. That includes Joe McFadden, quarterback; Julius Koshlap and Lou Ghecas, halves, and Jim Castiglia, fullback. In reserve for this aggregation will be Ben Buivin and Jack Spencer.

The second backfield combination will consist of Louis Falcone, quarterback; Frank Dornfeld, Jack Doolan and Al Kull, halves, and Jim McLaughlin, fullback, the latter three all sophomores. Ray Schmitt, Red O'Connell and John Barrett may work into the picture somehow.

Meet Detroit October 4

Catholic University aimed yesterday's drill at no indefinite opponent. The sole aim of Coach Arthur (Dutch) Bergman was to develop an aerial defense for Detroit University, which the Cards will meet October 4 in their opening game. Coach Gus Dorais is well known for the air attack he annually develops.

Mrs. Stokes Fires 83 At Manor; Kenwood Medal to Mrs. Kreuzburg

Mrs. W. R. Stokes, Manor County Club's steady stroker, turned in the low score of the day yesterday as qualifying rounds were staged for women's golf championship at various local country clubs.

Mrs. Stokes blistered her home course with a round of 82, topping a field of 36 players easily. Her first round opponent today will be Mrs. H. J. Beech.

At Kenwood Country Club, Mrs. R. T. Kreuzburg toured the par 76 Mrs. W. R. Stokes, Manor Country four strokes. Second was Mrs. H. J. Cooper, and one stroke higher was Mrs. A. A. MsEntee. In all, 43 feminine par chasers qualified for six flights of match play.

Best of the field of 40 at Washington Golf and Country Club was Mrs. Wilda Martin, whose 90 captured the medal. A 91 was the low of the day at Congressional, the medal going to Mrs. J. W. Godfrey. A small field battled the difficult par 77 course, in most cases scores being unusually high.

Over the long and hazardous Columbia Country Club layout, the best score of the day was chalked up by Mrs. J. A. Marr, a 97. Her opponent in first-flight match play today will be Mrs. H. J. Makensie.

Schumacher Beats Giants

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 9.—Prince Hal Schumacher and the New York Giants did an about-face today to trounce the Brooklyn Dodgers, 7 to 4, after giving up three runs in the first inning.

The veteran right-hander allowed five hits in the first inning and then gave up only eight in the remainder of the game, striking out seven and pitching seven straight shutout innings.

In the meantime the Giants worked out on three Brooklyn pitchers for 14 hits and scored all their runs in the first six frames.

Frank Demaree and Mickey Witek each made three safeties while Mel Ott batted in three runs with a single and a double.

However, individual hitting honors went to Dixie Walker of the Dodgers, who had a perfect day at the plate with five singles.

It was the fifth time in 19 games that the Giants had managed to beat Brooklyn and dropped the Dodgers to seven games behind the Cincinnati Reds, National League pacemakers, who were idle.

Gennaro Scores at Timonium for Second Straight Victory

Victor Scores Easily Under Rider Vesseli

Crowd of 7,000 On Hand for Day's Racing; Colored Post Is Second

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Timonium, Md., Sept. 9.—Gennaro, a horse which Trainer J. Merryman Black wanted to sell for a song at Marlboro, continued to show resentment by winning his second straight purse today in the Cannaday Farm sprint, featuring the Monday program. A winner here last week at odds of 16-1, Gennaro did not fool the customers today and was installed the favorite in the field of eight fast horses.

The gelded son of Caruso and Caricature made good in easy fashion, Jockey A. Vesseli having little to do except guide the 4-year-old. He was running easily at the end of the 4½ furlongs and was three lengths ahead of a gang rush for second money which brought the camera to the aid of the judges. Colored Post was given the place award a neck ahead of Hi-Blaze.

The crowd of 7,500 saw Highland Song, owned by C. E. George, of Washington, go to the front at the break to be dogged by Star Strewn, a 38-1 shot. Gennaro, in the opening stages, was in close quarters. Once free on the backstretch, Gennaro came out, circled the leaders and went on about his business. Highland Song tired and the three-horse rush for second money developed approaching the wire.

This was Gennaro's third victory in five starts this year and he paid a $5.60 mutuel.

E. A. Nicodemus' Mayfern made good for the favorite players in the first race under a good ride by Jockey George Watson. The daughter of Mowlee closed three lengths ahead of Meer Khan with Ginseng third. Mayfern paid $4.70. Jockey W. Kelly and Blenheim Rose, another filly, completed a $15.10 daily double by taking the second race by a length and a half. Fulton B. and Ala Mode were the other money horses. Blenheim Rose paid $8.

Chester F. Hockley, chairman of the Maryland racing commission, announced today that a hearing will be granted the five persons suspended by the stewards during the meeting for their connection with the horse, Prairie Man, which was "warmed up" with a battery prior to a seventh race on Thursday. The horse was scratched by the stewards.

The hearings will take place in the commission office in the Maryland Trust Building at 1 o'clock tomorrow.

Counterpoise Wins Feature At Pawtucket

Favored Tow Rope Is Second; Burning Stick Runs Third

By the Associated Press

Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 9.—A $4,750 claim at Hialeah Park last February Counterpoise today carried the silks of W. F. Mannagh to victory, winning the $1,600 Woonsocket Purse at Narrangansett by a length and a half.

Counterpoise was given a long rest soon after going to her new barn and was not raced at all from March 1 to August 19. Today marked her third start in New England and her first victory of the year.

A length and one-half back of her at the finish of the mile and 70 yards was the favored Tow Rope, owned by the Tall Trees Stable. He had a length and a half of E. A. Bischoff's Burning Stick, with D. A. Woods' Busy K. another length back.

The winner and Tow Rope ran first and second throughout the race, the favorite making repeated challenges, but failing to close much ground. B. F. Lister's One O' One was third for a time but tired after the first five furlongs and yielded to the challenge of Burning Stick on the outside.

Heurich Brewers Lose to Waterbury Nine in Tourney, 6-4

Connecticut Team Routs McFadden

Washingtonians Unable to Overtake 6-Run Lead Made In First 2 Frames

By the Associated Press

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 9.—The Washington Brewers were unable to overcome an early deficit here today and went down, 6 to 4, before the Waterbury, Conn., club which has been one of the favorites in the National Amateur Baseball Federation tournament here.

Waterbury teed off on McFadden in the first inning, when Mullins and Devito led off with singles and both men counted on a long double to left by Yoska. Strokalaitas brought Yoska home with a single to right.

McFadden then settled down and retired the side without further damage, but Waterbury resumed the attack in the next inning. Longo poled a home run into left. Johnson beat out an infield hit and Devito sent him to third with a single. Yoska again came through with a double, scoring Johnson and sending Devito to third. Devito came in on a fielder's choice.

The Brewers made one without a hit in the third. Knight walked after two were out and came all the way home when Devito dropped Kaufman's long fly.

Two bases on balls, to Brewer and Knight, started the Brewers rally in the seventh. Kaufman then got the first hit for his side by beating out an infield tap.

Barry punched a line single to center, scoring Brewer and Knight. Murphy flied to Devito, who dropped the ball, Kaufman scoring. Johnson came out and Posnak ended it by hitting into a double play.

Mid-Atlantic Pro-Am Won By Andy Gibson

Bonnie View Star Scores Win With Three Under Par

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Sept. 9.—Andy Gibson, the wee Scot from Bonnie View, continued his hot streak of last week and played around Suburban in a three under par 67 to take the pro sweepstakes in the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. pro-amateur tourney today.

As in his final round of the City Open last week Gibson was still shooting his long irons with rifle-like accuracy that left him little trouble around the pin.

Al Houghton, who had driven all night to get here from Scranton where he played in the Anthracite Open, had a round that almost equaled Andy's, finishing in second place only a stroke behind by blasting his way over the back nine in 32. In third place was little George Diffenbaugh with a 70.

Jim Flattery, assistant pro at Baltimore Country Club, teamed with Lee Temple, of Terra Mariae, to turn in a best ball of 62 to take the pro-amateur prize. Hugh McLellan, from Edgewood Arsenal, teamed with F. A. McNally, of Mount Pleasant, to take second place with a 63. This was largely due to McNally's hot putter. Mac was sinking long ones from all over the greens and on the holes he missed Hughie took up the slack.

Tied for third at 64 were Leo Walper and Roger Peacock, George Diffenbaugh and George Vass, of Washington, and Gibson and J. Barrett, of Baltimore.

Sixth place was split between the 65s; John Flattery and Lee Temple, Carroll MacMaster and Bill Cole and Al Houghton and Joe Balestri.

Pro sweepstakes—Al Houghton, 68; George Diffenbaugh, 70; Leo Walper, 71; Mel Shorey, 78; Al Jamison, no card.

Pro-amateur—George Diffenbaugh, pro, and Bobby Brownell, 66; George Vass, 64; J. K. Sassmett, 68.

Al Houghton, pro, and Joe Balestri, 65; L. H. Burch, 67; Jeff Baggett, 67.

Leo Walper, pro, and Frank Williams, 68; Arthur Urban, 67; Roger Peacock, 64.

Mel Shorey, pro, and Charley Price, 72; Eddie Ault, 71; Jack Olmstead, 69.

Al Jamison, pro; Joe Young, W. Food, Don Duncan, no cards.

National Mat Body Reelects Officials

Milwaukee, Sept. 9 (AP).—The National Wrestling Association today reelected Col. Harry Landry, of Friar Point, Miss., president; J. T. Joyner, jr., Winston-Salem, N. C., first vice president, and C. C. McCrary, Tulsa, Okla., secretary-treasurer.

out nine of 40. His start on the back nine was enough to throw a seasoned golfer off his game, a bad four on the par 3 tenth and three putts for a bogey on the eleventh. But he came back with a 15-footer for a birdie on the twelfth and a short birdie putt on the sixteenth to finish with 36 and 76, 1 under par for 16 of the 18 holes.

Ralph Bogart was in six traps and three putted two greens but he came out nicely with a 75. He was out of a trap within 2 feet of the hole for a birdie on the ninth and on the sixteenth he hit a perfect drive, a three iron within 12 feet of the pin and dropped the putt for an eagle three.

He one putted five greens and according to the Congressional youngster, "I was missing the birdie putts but making them for pars." Both he and Skinker were well satisfied with the way they are hitting the ball, however, and are both confident of making the select 64.

Billy Shea, who arrived too late this morning to practice, felt it during his round as he just couldn't get the feel of the club. His drives were all right but his second shots were sprayed in traps and rough.

Otto Greiner, of Baltimore, who is tagged to come through with a good showing here, had every part of his game down except the second shots, and they were just enough off line to run his score to 76.

Accounting Club Scores Five in Fifth for 8-3 Victory

Held scoreless for four innings by District Grocery nine's Pitcher DeVers, General Accounting Office rupted with five runs in the fifth inning of the Departmental League playoff game on the Ellipse yesterday, eventually winning by 8-3.

The teams had previously battled to a 0-0 score in the 10-inning game which launched the series. The second in the two-out-of-three affair will be played today on the South Ellipse at 4 p. m.

To Lenny Hoff, starting G. A. O. hurler who went the route, went credit for a well-pitched game. He sprinkled 10 hits throughout the nine innings, never allowing more than one run a stanza. His mates reached DeVers and his successors, Alexander and Pembrooke, for 11 safeties. The only base-on-balls of the game was issued by DeVers.

Tastee Diner Bowlers Win

The Georgia Avenue Bowling League got under way last night at Silver Spring Alleys, with Tastee Diner stealing the spotlight as it defeated Valdener Landscrapers in three straight games.

High game went to Bill King, of Mitchell Radio team, and H. Buckner, of Carter Landhardt, each with 148. C. Humphries shot the high set, 381, and Mitchell Radio took team game and set honors with 644 and 1,761.

H. Phipps, of the Standard Oil team, topped all pinmen in the Petroleum League at Columbia Alleys last night with a high game of 134. He also had the high set of the evening with 353. Van Horn, of Konsum, had second high set with 350.

While the York Heating and Fuel team was winning three straight from Konsum, Colonial Fuel won two out of three from Gulf Refining and the Wayne Oil Burner team took the odd game from Ott's Service Stations.

seven par shooters, the others: Trailer Bill Holt, of upper New York State; Ellis Knowles, 56-year-old veteran of 20 amateur championships; Skip Alexander, former Duke golf captain; former intercollegiate titleholder Fred Haas; George Dawson, Chicago, and Dan Cawley, Marietta, Ohio.

Cards of the Washington and vicinity qualifiers:

With the exception of Ward's 72 and a 73 for George Dunlap, of Pinehurst, the defending champions had a poor day. Johnny Fisher and Willie Turnesa staggered in with 77's, Johnny Goodman had to come back in 37 for a 78, Chick Evans, putting crosshand now, returned a 79, and Francis Ouimet, who won the crown again 20 years after his first triumph, was well back with an 82. Jesse Guilford and Max Marston did not start.

Ward's expected closest rival for the crown, Wilford Wehrle, was not spectacular with a 75, while the two-time finalist, Ray Billows, was among the 76 shooters.

The battle for the 64 match play berths after tomorrow's 18-hole round will find most of the high 70 shooters missing. Seventy players were 77 or better today and it is predicted that nothing over 153 or 154 at the highest will make the match play grade.

Of interest to Washingtonians, former city champ and another of Georgetown's intercollegiate titleholders, Johnny Burke, shot good golf for a 74 while Georgetown sophomore, Jack Donohue, was among the 76 shooters. Frank Allan, three-time Chevy Chase Invitation finalist, looks to be a sure qualifier after a fine 73. Bobby Dunkelberger came back in 36 for a 75.

McCarthy's low round included four birdies, all resulting from approach shots stuck dead on the stick. However, he scrambled to a par on the fifteenth, dropping a chip shot to save a valuable stroke.

Tobacco Firms Plead Innocent To 'Price Fixing'

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 9 (AP).—Major tobacco companies pleaded innocent today and asked dismissal of Federal antitrust charges on arraignment in United States District Court.

Eight of the largest concerns and 33 executives who also pleaded innocent, are accused of price fixing and monopoly. A criminal information filed by the Department of Justice after a two-year investigation charged them with practices "deliberately designed to dominate and dictate harsh and oppressive terms" to growers of leaf tobacco and to wholesalers and retailers of tobacco products.

Federal Judge H. Church Ford gave defense attorneys until September 23 to file briefs supporting their motions for dismissal and to compel stricter specifications in accusations by the Government. Oral arguments were set for October 30.

The judge said he would call the case on the first day of the January term of court, opening January 13, and set the trial date then.

New World Order Contemplates More National Self Containment

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
Economic Commentator

As military planes hover over Great Britain, world trade is at a turning point. If as a result of the conflict, hard boiled dictators are more influential in directing the destinies of the Old World, existing prejudices over here concerning foreign trade are likely to be modified.

Certainly trading with the dictators would provide no sentimental lift.

Mr. Rukeyser

Events are likely to make us analyse our foreign trade prospects more realistically, and to reappraise foreign trade and tariff theories.

If the Nation's foreign trade were placed on a business-like basis, then we should be more selective toward the export trade and would insist on trying to recoup our costs out of such business, including the cost of capital. Such profitable exports would serve a double purpose in that they would provide a means of payment for imports of essential raw materials and other products we lack and desire.

If, as a result of this war, there is any substantial strengthening of the position of the dictators, then the classical mid-Victorian doctrine of international specialization will go into the discard. Great nations will not wish to run the risk of dependence on foreign countries as sources of supply for essential materials. There will be a tendency to establish domestic sources, even though there may be an economic burden in duplicating facilities at home or in nearby friendly nations. In addition, there will doubtless be a great stimulus to the use of science and invention to find synthetic substitutes which, in case of stress, can be used instead of imported materials.

While Hitler was still an indifferent house painter and while Mussolini was still posing as a "radical" editor, forces were already at work in the world leading in the direction of national self-containment. A classic example of the hazard in the modern world of clinging too literally to the doctrine of international specialization is the case of Chile.

Its prewar economy was predicated on the Chilean world monopoly in the nitrate market. Instead of worrying about diversifying its economy, Chileans were pleased by their illusion of a bonanza from nitrates and copper, but during the first World War, science and invention went to bat to jeopardize Chile's economic position as scientists in Germany and the United States developed competitive synthetic nitrates. The effect of the competition was not only to reduce the ratio of Chilean nitrate sales to total world consumption, but also to deal a devastating blow to prices.

Meantime, new copper discoveries in Rhodesia and elsewhere affected adversely the world price for Chile's other staple, namely, copper. Now necessity is driving Chile to the modern concept of a better diversified and balanced national economy.

If Great Britain should prove victorious, it is unreasonable to expect any marked reversal of the broad trend toward greater economic nationalism. As far back as 1931, Great Britain turned its back on its historic free trade position and turned to tariffs.

As far as the New World is concerned, acute problems of economic redesigning will present themselves in connection with surplus cotton-growing in the United States and surplus wheat-raising in Canada. Likewise, in a nationalistic world, Cuba, specializing in sugar, is out on a limb, and its economic security is contingent on willingness of the United States to import Cuban sugar instead of raising all of the Nation's requirements on American territory, where additional revenue for farmers is desirable.

These delicate problems of economics cannot be solved by blitzkreigs, but challenge thoughtful formulation of practical policies.

PUC Authorizes Capital Transit $1,636,000 Loan

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday authorized the Capital Transit Co to borrow $1,636,000 for the purchase of 35 new streetcars and 112 new buses. The money will be obtained through the National Savings & Trust Co.

A total of $750,000 is to be made available by November 1 and $886,000 by February 1, 1941. Application for permission to borrow the money was made by the transit company several months ago "in the interest of efficient public service."

Foreign Markets

London, Sept. 9 (AP).—Security prices wavered today, but there was no sign of serious pressure in any department despite the shattering effect of the latest air attacks. British government bonds, recently near the year's top prices, lost as much as a full point. Tobacco and cement stocks held their ground in the industrial list. Coppers attracted support but kaffirs tended downward under Cape Town offerings. Oil held unchanged. Brazilian issues improved in the foreign bond market.

Liverpool—Cotton futures declined 6 to 7 points today. Prices were affected by weakness at Bombay and the theory the United States cotton report today would show a large increase in the current crop.

Grains Slump; War Intensity Chills Traders

Wheat Closes 1½ To 1¾ Cents Off; Corn Prices Ease

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Increasing intensity of German attacks on London sent a chill through the grain market today and wheat led a price slump with losses ranging up to almost 2 cents a bushel at times.

Weakness of securities attracted attention to the European reports and, although traders got some encouragement from stubborn British resistance and attacks on German positions, the news was too much for many dealers who hastened to accept profits or even up accounts, some selling was regarded as "short" operations.

Maximum losses in wheat were 1½-1¾ cents. Closing prices were 1⅛-1⅜ lower than Saturday, September 74@74⅛, December 75⅝@75¾. Corn closed ⅛-⅜ off, September 62⅝@62¾, December 56⅞@57; oats ⅜-½ down; soybeans ¾-1⅛ lower; rye ½-⅞ down and lard 15-20 lower.

Other grains followed wheat downward, rye and soybeans showing the most weakness. Corn declines were held to fractions as country bookings, which have been running in excess of 100,000 bushels daily, fell off to only 34,000 bushels. Receipts, however, were 387 cars. An Illinois elevator firm reported ear worm damage has appeared in corn while beans showed improved filling of pods.

The Market

A Special Correspondent.

War Chills and Technical Reaction Blamed As Stocks Slump; Average Drops 1.02 Points

New York, Sept. 9.—Intensification of the aerial bombardment over Great Britain raised fears of the ability of the country to stand-up against the German assaults and consequently the financial markets here were dominated by the more bearish element. Selling broke out at the opening gong, leaving a gap on the charts between the low of Saturday and the high of today, and at the close prices averaged down 1.02 point.

The bullish forces made much of the fact that after the sell-off of the early hours the market had a period of comparative dullness. Volume for the day was 591,920 shares, which is small compared with the turnovers last week when the list was on the upgrade.

The decline was in line with the predictions of most of the technical observers of the market. During the rise last week they pointed out that we were still in a bear market even though the secondary trend was upward. They pointed out that recoveries, in such cases, usually ran to between one-third and two-thirds of the decline. This area was penetrated last week. Therefore, the technicians warned of a possible technical correction. We appeared to be having one today, but those who place no emphasis on charts and technical theories placed the blame for the decline on the intensification of the air raids over England. In other words, each group had its ready explanation.

Business news covering domestic affairs continued to be favorable, but the holders of securities, large and small, are looking into international affairs more than into domestic business indices in their effort to decide upon their own buying or selling policy.

The domestic trade news was favorable. Steel operations for this week will be at 91.9 per cent of theoretical capacity. A sharp expansion was looked for, but this rate goes even beyond that prevailing before the Labor Day holiday. It had been expected that the rate would be a fraction of a point shy of the pre-holiday rate.

Another index of business, the General Motors sales report, showed a decline in sales for August as compared with July, but the August total was 31.5 per cent better than that shown for the same month last year.

Losses which took place in the New York market were about as severe as those which were made on the London market. Trading there was marked by an orderly decline, with losses small. This market was strong during the early phases of the latest German drive and it was the reassurance of the London market that helped the New York list to get going last week.

New York Central was again the day's most active stock and lost about a point. Steel was off more than 2 points along with Bethelehem. Motors gave up 1½ and Chrysler 3¾. Curtiss Wright was the most active of the aviations, and lost a good fraction. Boeing followed with a drop of 1¼. Lockheed dropped about 2.

In common with the trend in stock dealings, bond prices moved lower here today although volume of dealings on the Stock Exchange at $4,008,000 was somewhat under the last previous full day's total.

Foreign bonds showed Canadian and Australian sections under particular pressure while losses ranged up to 4 points or more. German and Italian issues recorded fractional gains.

Sugar Futures

New York, Sept. 9 (AP).—Domestic sugar futures drummed up a little resistance after early setbacks today, but at the finish the list was still down 1 to 3 points. Issuance of 17 delivery notices stimulated selling in September. When the raw market failed to take the cue, prices steadied. Sales totaled 4,150 tons. World futures receded after a steady start and ended 2 to 3 points down on turnover of only 1,850 tons: December, †.70; March, 7434. In the raw market 43,000 bags of Puerto Ricans clearing September 30 sold at 2.71 cents a pound, unchanged for the spot position. Duty-frees were offered at 2.73 to 2.75 cents. Refined remained at 4.20@4.35 cents a pound locally, despite further unsettlement in Western areas.

Cotton Futures

New York, Sept. 9 (AP).—Cotton futures scampered over the hurdle of a startling increase in the Government estimate of the size of the new crop of gains of 4 to 8 points today.

Analysts fell back on technical reasons to explain the resiliency of prices. Three main influences were noted:

The cushioning effect of the Government loan on the staple; a disposition by producers to hold back their cotton for a better price; recent absence of hedging pressure because of the lateness of the new crop. Ginnings up to September 1, observers noted, were less than half the same time last year.

The list sold off 3 to 6 points at one time after the report was issued, but selling quickly spent its force. Renewal of demand disclosed a scarcity of contracts and prices were bid up.

Worth street reported quieter demand for textiles after the boomlet of the past two weeks. Advance prices were fully maintained however.

U. S. Forecasts Sharp Increase In Cotton Crop

Favorable Weather Boosts Estimate to 12,772,000 Bales

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department credited the most favorable August growing conditions on record yesterday with having increased the indicated yield of cotton to 12,772,000 bales on September 1, or 1,343,000 more than were in prospect August 1.

Increases were called especially notable in the States from Alabama to Texas, inclusive, although improvement in Louisiana was less than in the States adjoining it.

The crop was forecast at 11,429,000 bales a month ago, based on August 1 conditions. Production last year was 11,817,000 bales and averaged 14,547,000 bales in the ten years, 1929-38.

The area of cotton for harvest this year was placed at 24,406,000 acres, compared with 23,928,000 last year and the ten-year average of 31,235,000 acres.

Abandonment of acreage after July 1 was reported to have been 2.6 per cent, compared with an average abandonment of 1.9 per cent during the ten years, 1930-39.

The condition of the crop on September 1 was 74 per cent of a normal, compared with 72 a month ago, 70 a year ago, and 62, the 1929-38 average.

A yield of 250.7 pounds of lint cotton to the acre is indicated from the September 1 condition, the department reported, compared with 222.3 pounds indicated a month ago, 237.9 pounds produced last year, and 198.1 pounds, the ten-year average.

Seasonal Drop In Meat Prices Expected Soon

By the Associated Press

Department of Agriculture economists said yesterday that meat prices, which have risen in recent weeks, probably would decline after mid-September if they followed the usual trend.

Prices usually increased in August, they added.

Factors contributing to the rise were given as increased consumer demand and reduced marketings of livestock. The increase in demand, the economists said, was due partly to the fact that most persons eat more while on vacations.

Hogs reached a top price of 7.65 cents a pound in Chicago last week, the highest since October. Better grades of cattle brought around 13 cents a pound, as against 11 to 11½ cents two months ago.

Tin Prices Tumble On London Market

London, Sept. 9 (AP).—Tin prices today tumbled to the lowest level since April 15, declining as much as £6. Dealers were reluctant to hold spot material which is not insurable against war risk. Offerings, however, were well absorbed at the lower levels.

Spot tin sold at £250 bid, £251 asked; future, £253 bid, £253 10s asked.

B. & O. Reports Gain In Freight Handling

Baltimore, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad reported today 47,473 cars of freight were handled by the line during the week ended September 7, an increase of 3,167 over the corresponding week a year ago. The total was a decrease, however, from the 53,162 cars reported handled during the preceding week ended August 31, 1940.

Tobacco Review

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 9.—During the past week leaf tobacco receipts declined to 1,123 hogsheads and sales were 794 hogsheads. Consequently many hogsheads were rejected.

Listen! with Glynn

It seems that success stories are still in the making.

Probably one of the most successful of them concerns Jean Holloway, who, at the age of 21, has just been signed at a nice, fancy figure, to write all the original dramas and special radio adaptations of hit plays for the Kate Smith "Variety Hour" over C. B. S. this fall. Topmost stars of the stage and the screen appear in those dramatic spots.

A little more than a year ago, Miss Holloway was an undergraduate at San Jose State Teachers College in California. An assignment in her English class one day was to write a radio script. The professor chose Miss Holloway's script as the best written and it subsequently was presented over the local radio station by a group of amateur players.

A short while later Miss Holloway, while on a visit to New York, submitted another script to an advertising agency. It was spotted by Ted Collins, Kate Smith's business manager, and he bought it for the show. Radio audiences heard it as "Katherine Howard."

Before the season was over, Miss Holloway had written original dramas for such well known figures of the theater as Gertrude Lawrence, Walter Huston, Gladys George and Eugenie Leontovich.

Part-Time Jobs Big Problem For Hatch Act

Stop-Watch May Be Needed to Enforce 'Clean Politics' Law

By Edward Ryan

A stop-watch may become as necessary for enforcing the Hatch Act as for refereeing a football game, Government officials indicated yesterday.

Until the courts say something else, it was learned, the Civil Service Commission will say, in effect, that any man holding a State or local job covered by the Hatch law must obey the law only when he is on that job.

For example, they will say that a banker who happens to be a State highway commissioner must comply with the Hatch Act during the time he is functioning as State highway commissioner—when he's working as a banker he's clear of the "clean politics" law.

Harry B. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission, described the new policy yesterday to members of the National Association of Attorneys General meeting in Philadelphia.

"Joker" in Wording

Mitchell said there were no difficulties where the law was definite in saying who was exempted from the "clean-politics" rules, as it is for elected officers. The trouble, he said, arose from Section 12 of the act extending the clean-politics ban to any "officer or employe of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part" by Federal funds.

The words "principal employment" and "activity" have bothered the commission, he indicated. The first phrase, he said, would mean "principal employment as such officer or employe" and would have "no relation to any other employment that an officer or employe may have outside of the State's service."

"For instance," said Mitchell, "the principal employment of most highway commissioners is something else than the work of the Highway Commission."

Come Under Law

"Nevertheless they come under the law—unless they are elected officials, and that is the case in only two or three States—because their State employment is principally with an activity which is financed in whole or in part from Federal funds.

"However, in most cases, highway commissioners give only a small portion of their time to highway work, and therefore the commission, following the principle in a decision by the Attorney General . . . has decided that they are only affected by the Hatch Act during the time that they are actually engaged in the work of the highway commission.

"In other words, they are restricted as to political activity during the time they are actually working for the State highway commission, but are perfectly free to engage in political activity while they are pursuing their everyday avocations as merchants, bankers, lawyers and other ordinary employment."

Mitchell said the same ruling would apply to members of other State boards who give only a part of their time to the State job.

Activity Is Defined

In defining the word activity, Mitchell said, the commissoin intends to enforce the Hatch ban for State highway employes who build new roads, not for the employes who repair roads.

"It is quite possible that this question will have to be decided by the courts," said Mitchell.

Officials of the Public Roads Administration pointed out that Federal funds help build State roads, but repair work on them is financed entirely by the States. Normally, however, the same employes at various times work on both types of jobs, construction and repairs.

Thomas A. MacDonald, Public Roads Commissioner, said his agency had been concerned about the problem of the Hatch Act for State highway employes, but so far had received no complaints of violations. Asked whether he believed a stop-watch system might become useful in enforcing the act, he remarked, "that's about right."

'Sam McGee From Tennessee' Dies—but Won't Be Cremated

Robert W. Service Mourns Death Of Yukon Character He Made Famous In Poem Dealing With Gold Rush

By the Associated Press

Beiseker, Alberta, Sept. 9.—Sam McGee, whose name became renowned through a sour dough poem by Robert W. Service, is dead.

The "Sam McGee from Tennessee," who actually was a native of Lindsay, Ontario, died in this little southern Alberta town last Thursday. His death came 34 years after Service wrote "The Cremation of Sam McGee."

The poem told how McGee from Tennessee was always "cold but the land of gold seemed to hold him like a spell" and he finally got warm when his frozen body was cremated.

McGee, 73 years old at the time of his death, wasn't spellbound by the search for gold, as his chief occupations in the Yukon were copper mining and roadbuilding. And he will not be cremated. He will be buried in Rosebud Church Cemetery, a few miles from Beiseker.

In Vancouver, Service expressed sorrow on learning today of the death of McGee.

Service said he picked up the idea for the poem from a story told at a dinner he attended in Whitehorse, in 1906.

Working in the Whitehorse bank, he came across the name of Sam McGee in the ledger. It rhymed so well that he used it in the poem, not knowing he would ever meet the real McGee.

But he did, one year after the poem was published and McGee had become a legendary figure in the North, forced to carry documents to prove his identity.

"We met one day in Whitehorse," said Service. "McGee came up to me and said, 'You used my name in one of your poems,' and looked embarrassed.

"I was embarrassed, too, and said, 'Did I?'

"McGee walked away without a word.

"I regret very much the death of Sam McGee—a worthy man."

Montgomery To Ask Bids On Road Work

Widening and Repaving Of Two Arterial Routes Will Be Started Soon

Bids are to be advertised for improvement of two main arteries in Montgomery County, Md.—Connecticut avenue and old Georgetown road—this week, Thomas Earle Hampton, president of the Montgomery County board of commissioners, announced yesterday.

Hampton said he had been in conference with State roads commission officials and had been assured that every effort would be made to advertise for bids this week. Work will start as soon as possible after the bids are opened and contracts awarded, road officials said.

The bids are to be asked for widening and repaving old Georgetown road from the Bank of Bethesda to Alta Vista and on Connecticut avenue from Bradley lane to Chevy Chase Lake. Hampton said the Connecticut avenue repaving would be divided into two parts. A parking will divide traffic on the two roadways.

Improvement of the two highways was lauded yesterday by the American Automobile Association. Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District of Columbia division of the A. A. A., said:

"The American Automobile Association is extremely gratified to learn that its efforts to secure improvement of Old Georgetown road and Connecticut avenue are at last bearing fruit. The improvements will mean much to residents of the suburban areas served by these roads, as well as to the residents of the District who will find new convenience in traveling into suburban Maryland."

The Montgomery County Civic Federation, the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce and other civic and business groups of the western suburban area, have battled for improvement of the roads for years.

Bethesda-Chevy Chase area also will be the scene of an extensive street and road improvement beginning later this week, Hampton said.

An appropriation of $10,000 has been allotted to the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area for improvement of its roads through oiling and chipping to protect the surfaces next winter.

Japan Fears U. S. May Order Full Embargo

Tokyo Also Worried By Anglo-American Threat in Far East

Tokyo, Sept. 9 (AP) via Radio).—Great concern has been aroused in Japan by a movement in the United States to place a complete embargo on shipments to Japan of oil, scrap metal and other vital raw materials, Domei, the authoritative Japanese news agency, said in a broadcast today.

Many Japanese also are alarmed over what they consider indications of impending common action by Britain and the United States in the Far East.

Anxiety has intensified since the National Defense Council submitted to President Roosevelt proposals for an embargo on essential materials, the agency said.

Such proposals, the influential Tokyo newspaper Yomuiri commented, may prove the beginning of an American blockade of Japan.

Yomuiri said it would be madness to hope for improvement of United States-Japanese relations, since "the course of the war in Europe and the failure of Great Britain must lead the United States to an imperialistic policy."

The newspaper referred to the "conviction" in the United States that "the common enemy of America and England is Japan."

Nazis Report 'Bombing' Buckingham With Bottle

Berlin, Sept. 9 (AP).—One German fighter squadron, named after its commander, Von Ruempel, reported celebrating its two-hundredth air victory yesterday by having each crew member empty a bottle of champagne and throw the empty bottle down over Buckingham Palace.

U. S. to Build 3,100 Miles of Defense Roads

District to Get $1,342,000 of Funds Allotted Program

About 3,100 miles of new roads to link 120 vital defense posts with the Nation's highway network will be built, Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody said yesterday.

Detailed plans for these new roads are being developed now, he said, while the 75,000-mile main highway system is being surveyed for the President.

The new roads, described as "access" roads, to serve 120 or more Army and Navy defense establishments will cost about $200,000,000, said Carmody. The money for them, he indicated, can be made available out of existing funds and the roads "can be built as fast as we have to build them."

Describes Program

Carmody also announced that the District would receive approximately $671,000 of Federal road funds in each of the 1942 and 1943 fiscal years, out of the $134,063,000 yearly authorization for the whole country. The District's share included $488,000 a year for main highway projects, $85,000 a year for secondary roads, and $98,000 a year for grade crossing projects.

Carmody, with Thomas H. MacDonald, public roads commissioner, described the highway program for national defense at a press conference, after President Roosevelt signed new legislation permitting "unobligated" road funds to be allocated first to road projects "important to the national defense."

Outside of the 3,100 miles of new roads to connect defense posts with the present highway system, Carmody said there may be some "but not many" new roads needed to fill gaps in the network of main routes.

Survey Being Conducted

A national highway survey is being conducted by the Public Roads Administration in cooperation with State highway commissions, on the basis of military requirements.

Among the weak spots which are being studied in the survey, Carmody said, are bridges, road widths, highway curves, road shoulders and grades in the existing highway system.

The new road law, he explained, gives an "opening wedge" for work on the development of express highways as possible military necessities. Under the law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to work with the States in financing purchases of rights of way needed for express highways. This part of the defense road program, said MacDonald, would have to be planned on a long term basis.

House Passes Bill to Let Jones Fill Two Posts

The House passed and sent to the Senate yesterday a resolution to permit Jesse H. Jones, Federal loan administrator, to become Secretary of Commerce without giving up his present post.

During brief debate, Representative Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, expressed concern over "loading Jones down" with two positions and added: "We don't want to kill him; I think he is the outstanding man in this Administration."

Committee of Bar Opposes Bill to Deport Harry Bridges

Disregarding Merits of Labor Leader's Case, Lawyers Find Congressional Proposal Runs 'Contrary to Spirit' of Constitution

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 9.—A special committee of the American Bar Association, citing a House-indorsed bill to deport as an alien Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader, cautioned today that even in times of national crisis the Nation should proceed "within the framework of Government and constitutional guarantees."

Without passing on the merits of the Bridges case, the committee on the Bill of Rights reported to the opening session of the association's sixty-third annual convention.

"We must see to it that concessions of customary privileges and rights do not go beyond what is clearly necessary for national safety; and that such necessary concessions shall be withdrawn upon the passing of the crisis."

"Contrary to the Spirit"

The Bridges bill, which the committee said is not being pressed in the Senate because of a new investigation under the Immigration Act, was termed "plainly contrary to the spirit of our institutions."

Meanwhile, Solicitor General Biddle, speaking to the section on real property, probate and trust law, asserted that a controversy over proposed review by the courts of rulings of governmental administrative agencies had been "unduly" magnified.

Deeming more important the formulation of methods which would assure good administrative decisions at the "outset," Biddle declared:

Leadership Called For

"As a method for regulating the regulators, judicial review, no matter how artfully contrived or how broad in scope, could not possibly be a success."

Charles A. Beardsley, of Oakland, Calif., the retiring president, opened the sessions with a call for "enlightened leadership" on the part of the Nation's 160,000 lawyers and judges to keep the country at peace and prepared for defense.

The special committee, turning to the general subject of suppression of organized activities hostile to "our national security," said:

"If and when such suppression is needed, it should be effected under general laws providing for a fair hearing and not by mob violence or even by official violence, outside the law."

No Law on Air War

Howard S. Leroy, professor of law at National University, Washington, in an address prepared for a conference on international and comparative law pointed out that "air warfare is not now subject to international legal limitation."

Attempts at limitation have not been effective," he declared, naming as contributory factors "the phenomenal success of the aeronautical art, and the consequences of its application to the technique of totalitarian war."

The commerce committee opposed proposed amendments to the Clayton Antitrust Act contained in the O'Mahoney-Hobbs bill, now pending in Congress.

Penalties Called Too Harsh

The report described some of the civil penalties contained in the bill as "unduly harsh," and said "if commonly invoked might constitute a serious blow to free private enterprise."

Other recommendations by committees included a merit system of employment for Government lawyers, exclusive of policy-making officials, and the creation of a permanent Congressional committee to study operations of the Security and Exchange Commission.

O'Connor Called 'Unfit' to Hold U. S. Judgeship

By the Associated Press

The opinion that J. F. T. O'Connor, former Comptroller of the Currency, was "temperamentally unfit" to hold a Southern California Federal District Court judgeship was voiced before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee yesterday by Wade H. Cooper, Washington attorney.

Cooper, who described himself as principal stockholder in the closed United States Savings Bank, told the committee that O'Connor, while Comptroller, had arbitrarily refused to allow the bank to reopen after the 1933 banking holiday.

The hearing closed with testimony by Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, that "never in eight years as a member of the House and 16 years as a Senator have I had the pleasure of doing official business with anyone more capable or patriotic than Mr. O'Connor."

Fr. Burns Dies; Former President Of Notre Dame

South Bend, Ind., Sept. 9 (AP).—The Very Rev. James A. Burns, C. S. C., assistant superior general of the Congregation of Holy Cross and president of the University of Notre Dame from 1919 to 1922 died tonight at the age of 73.

Father Burns was born at Michigan City, Ind., received an A. B. degree from Notre Dame in 1888 and was ordained a priest in 1893. He held advanced degrees from Notre Dame and Catholic University, Washington, D. C.

He was one of the founders of the Catholic College Conference, which became the Catholic Educational Association.

The funeral will be Thursday morning, with interment on the university campus.

Family Sues Bomb Inventor

Lester P. Barlow, Baltimore inventor who recently lamented that expenses and taxes would eat up the $592,719.21 the Government is going to pay him for using his bombs in the World War, was sued for half of that amount in the District Court yesterday.

John F. Clark, Los Angeles attorney, claimed that on October 22, 1915, Barlow signed a contract by which Clark became a half-owner of Barlow's bomb invention and entitled to half the proceeds.

Clark asked the court to restrain Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and William A. Julian, Treasurer of the United States, from paying Barlow the money until the case has been decided.
